Today November 16, 2015, marks the 1st anniversary of "Beakman Fans". After one year, of research, and poking about, I have been able to find many interviews, and current events projects, that the cast and crew of Beakman's World have been working on. With so much information, and a years worth of material to go through, I luckily had the fore-thought to make a index image, and summary of each of the well over 100 appearances, that the cast and crew have been doing, over these many years. I'm looking forward to seeing how many can be found in the next year.

How many of these videos, articles, and reviews have you read my summaries for? {Hint, not all of them have been posted to the groups timeline.}

This is a index card, for the index cards. it features the first 100 things that I reviewed/made a summary about. Since I hope to start a new folder for the next hundred, now seemed a good time to index the full set of reference images. {Mark Mothersbaugh did a similar thing on his "Musik For Insomniaks" cassette tapes, with a sample listing of each track at the end of the album. Mark was the person that composed the "Beakman's World" theme song}. Hopefully plenty more summary/review/interviews still to be discovered. I hope everyone is looking forward to the next 100 index cards as much as I am.

Working with my friend, and Co-host Ju, I wanted to announce that we started another Facebook page for "Beakman Fans", this time as a community page. It was something I hoped to do later in the year, but the celebration of 'Beakman Fans' one year anniversary, caused me to try and hurry it along. We will want to try and use Hash tags for our entires, in the hopes more fans of the shows and actors that appeared in the show will get a chance to see the latest updates.

* <https://www.facebook.com/BeakmanFans>

This new page will mostly have the same main updates, and posts that we will continue to post here. The second page mainly for people who don't like to join groups, and just want to "Like" pages, and see updates from time to time, and that person doesn't have to subscribe, or be a member of the group to see our posts. It seemed like a good way to reach more Beakman fans. We have also tried to start a Twitter, and Google+ page, to help fans on other sites find information about Beakman, with links back to this group.

The 25th anniversary of "Beakman's World" will be in less then 2 years, and we wish to to reach as many fans as possible. So that hopefully if there is any special events to be planned, or released for the 25th anniversary, more people will be ready to support it.

Did you know that 'Scratchy the Chicken' had a older, more successful, half brother named 'Kino'? Mark Ritts played the puppeteer of a 8 year old, boy puppet, character named "Kino", who was one of the hosts of a television show named "Storytime", later retitled "Kino's Storytime". In this video of two episodes from the 1994 season, the second episode features Mark Ritts reading to Kino, and driving his red convertible car.

The television show took place on a stage that was meant to represent a library, and Kino visited it each episode. At first he had only one friend there, a librarian named Mara {Marabina Jaimes}, then later in 1994, a second character named Lucy {a local painter} was introduced. Occasionally other real people visited, and read stories to Kino, and other local children. The show originally aired from October 11, 1992, and lasted until 1997. The television show was produced by the Los Angeles television station KCET. It was later distributed on television through PBS {Public Broadcasting Service} channels throughout the USA.

This is a series of screenshots from the VHS release of, a television program called "Kino's Storytime", this is from "Volume Two", in the VHS series. Each video featured several illustrated books read by different people, and there were two episodes from the television series, on each video tape. This VHS series mostly focused on episodes of the show, where guest celebrities read the stories. Kino was played by Mark Ritts, famous for being "Lester D. Rat" on Beakman's World. Mark Ritts appears on camera talking with Kino, and reads the first story, in the second episode of this VHS video.

The first episode begins with highlights from this episode. It then gives the funding information about how the money was raised for the television show. That is followed by the opening title segment with Kino setting up the letters to form the show's title. Originally it was only called "Storytime", but the "Kino's" name was later added to the shows title. But the version with his name in the title, does not appear in this video version.

Kino arrives at the library, and visits with Lucy {Anne Betancourt}, who is painting, and Mara {Marabina Jaimes} who is checking-in books. Mara and Kino admire Lucy's painting, a abstract paints, that Lucy says is about "painting how I feel", which is happy. Kino says he feels like he wants to listen to a story.

Mara suggests she could read, "Anna and the Little Green Dragon. By Klans Baumgart." Kino aggress, and then asks Mara if she will teach him to paint. But when she says maybe later after the story. But Kino says that later "Uncle John" is also supposed to come and read a story, so he might not get the chance to try painting, and Lucy says if the uncle comes "we can paint another day".

"Anna and the Little Green Dragon" by Klans Baumgart {ISBN: 1562821679}, is then read by Mara. It is a story about a girl that is eating breakfast when out of the cereal box a little dragon appears. The dragon then plays on the table with the breakfast and makes a mess. The girl's mother then appears and yells at her. The girl tells about the dragon, and the mother doesn't believe her, but then the mother dragon comes to the house to find her son.

After the story is read, Lucy points out the fly character that isn't mentioned in the story, but appears in the drawings of the book. A pun on the word dragon fly.

John Goodman is then seen entering the reading area, with a few children around him. He tells that he is going to read them two stories.

Lucy then asks if he is really Kino's uncle, but it is revealed that they just call him uncle because of how nice he is.

"Little Polar Bear", by Hans de Beer {ISBN: 1558583580}, is then read by John Goodman. The story is about a little polar bear named Lars, who was traveling with his dad. While they travel dad teaches him to swim and hunt, and make wind barriers. But then when they fall asleep, the ice cracks and they are separated. Lars then finds a barrel to ride on as his ice melts. He then lands on a jungle covered island. He then meets a Hippo. {John the actor uses a silly cartoon type voice to represent the hippo.} The hippo then takes him across the island to meet a wise Eagle that tells Lars how to get home. Along the way to the eagle, Lars learns about trees, mountains, and even a chameleon. They then meet the Eagle, which has a high pitched voice {also preformed by John Goodman}. The eagle then arranges for a whale to take Lars home. Lars then meets his dad, and as they go home, Lars tells his dad about all the things that he had seen. {This story was later followed by several more books in the series, then made into a BBC television series, and several films.}

After the story Kino asks if Lars will ever return to the island to visit his new friends again, and the kid, John, and Lucy talk about the subject, and if they would go back. They then talk about how Lars' dad had taught him something, and later at the end of the story, Lars taught his father about the island. John then talks about chameleons, and predators. They then ask how Mara's work is going, then decided to go over to where she is to read the next book.

"Rose Meets Mr. Wintergarten", by Bob Gram {ISBN: 1564023958}, is then read by John Goodman. The story is about a little girl who moves into a house near a spooky looking house. She and her friends are playing near there, when the ball goes over the fence and into the yard of the spooky house. Her mother then tells her to go and get the ball, but to also bring cookies, and flowers for the neighbor. She then knocks on the door and asks to look for the ball. But he tell her to go away, She leaves the flowers and cookies. He then decided to go outside for the first time in many years, and then begins to enjoy himself. He then kicks back the ball to the children, and then his shoe comes off, and he asks for it back, and they send it back over the fence to him. Then he suggests that they play again tomorrow.

After the story John asks about what the children think happened the next day. Lucy and Mara also talk about other things that they could have done together like painting, and reading stories.

Kino then suggest that Lucy can then teach him to pain, but Lucy suggests that they first recommend some other books for "our friends at home, to read on their own".

Kino then recommends.

* The Adventures of Isabel. By Ogden Nash, Illustrated by, James Marshall.

And Mara recommends.

* Roses sing on New Snow: A Delicious Tale. By Paul Yee, Illustrated by Harvey Chan.
{ISBN: 0027936228}

They then thank John for coming to visit them, and then they tell 'everyone at home', to "Keep a Story in Your Heart".

As the credits role, Lucy is demonstrating how to pain, as Kino watches. After the credits, The books, and their authors, and, or illustrators are listed.

Lastly the "Funding provided by" messages are announced again.

The second episode on this video, begins similar to the fist, with highlights of the stories to be told, funding notices, and title sequence.

Kino is playing in the library, with a antique, red, toy car. He then tells about a time when he and Mark {Mark Ritts the guy that plays Kino's voice, and is his puppeteer}, where in a red car, and Mark read him a story. There is then a flash back to the moment where Mark is driving his red convertible top car. They ride down some hills and stop at a place along the hill, so Mark can read to Kino.

"My Little Red Car", by Chris L. Demarest {ISBN: 187809386X}, is then read by Mark. In this story, a Boy with his toy car, tells that he wishes to do, when he is older, and has a real car. He talks about the things he will see and the their are images of places he will go like Paris, a visit the Egyptian pyramids, and even the North Pole. The boy tells the story as if he could take the entire trip around the world in a single day, and return home that night, and then it shows the boy asleep next to his toy car, as if he has been dreaming about all the previous places he would visit.

After the story, Kino says they should get the car moving because "we've got lots of places to go to."

The scene then returns to the library with Kino playing with his toy car. Kino is then interrupted by a boy named Zachery Ty Bryan, who wants to read him a great book, but then when he looks, he realizes that he left the book at home. Zachery then leaves, and Kino talks to the camera, and the people watching him on television. Then Lucy come in, and is about to paint. Kino is about to ask her to read him a story, when a young girl {Tatyana Ali}, comes in carrying the book that Zachery had forgotten at home. Kino asks her to read the story, but Lucy says that they should wait for Zachery to return, because it is his book. The girl then instead reads a different book, she also brought with her.

"Three Wishes", by Lucille Clifton {ISBN: 0385304978}, and illustrated by Michael Hays, is then read by the young girl {Tatyana}. In the story a girl talks about a penny she found on New Year's day, with her birth year on it, and how she got three wishes. First she wishes the day was warmer, on a cold day, and then the sun comes out. She talks about her wanting to be a singer in the movies, and her best friend, a boy. They then talk about the wishes and she doesn't believe him when she is told about the wishes. They argue and she wishes that he would leave, and he leaves. She then realizes she has one wish left, and asks her mother what she should wish for. Her mom says she would wish for good friends. The girl then remembers about all the fun times she had with her friend. She then wishes for her friend, and just then a friend of her's appears. Then she says how this wishing thing is real.

After reading the story, the young girl {Tatyana} asks Kino what he would wish for if he had a wish. He says he wishes Zachery would return so they could read the book. Then the young girl says she will go look for Zachery.

Zachery is then heard outside the library, and Kino tries to tell him about Tatyana and the book, but he gets confused, and Zachery then goes to Tatyana's house to find her and the book. But she left the book in the library with Kino.

A new lady {Shari Belafonte} then comes in, and asks about Zachery, but Kino says that he is gone, and that they should read the book. But the new lady then asks Kino if that is true, Kino admits to having lied. And the lady suggests that she begin reading another book.

"The Magic House", Robyn Harbert Eversole, illustrated by Peter Palagonia {ISBN: 0531059243}, is then read by the new lady. The book is about a girl that lives in a house with her family. She uses her imagination to enjoy places in the house, like having the stairs as a water fall. A desert/living room, a cave in the basement, with monsters/washer and dryer. The girl's sister didn't believe the things that the girl saw, and the things would disappear. The sister wants to be a ballerina, and the girl tries to imitate her dance moves, but wants to know about if the sister is really going to turn into a swan, and dance in water. {A hidden reference to 'Swan Lake' ballet, by Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky.} The sister has trouble learning the moves. The girl then tries to get her sister to use her imagination, and dance like there is a lake at the bottom of the stairs/waterfall. As the sister gets better at the dance, the girl sees her sister turn into a swan. She then asks her sister if she sees the lake, but the sister doesn't answer, but the girl knows that the answer would have been a yes. {Probably because swans don't talk.}

After the story, Kino then asks Lucy, if she saw the pictures, and that they looked like paintings. Lucy at the time is painting. The lady {Shari} then leaves to look for Zachery. {Only then is her name revealed to be Shari.} Kino then predicts that now that she left, Zachery, and Tatyana would return, and a second, or so later, they arrive. Zachery also brought his sister.

"Monster Mama", by Liz Rosenberg, and illustrated by Stephen Gammell {ISBN: 0399219897}, is then read by Zachery. The story is about a boy, who's mother is a monster. {It is illustrated drawings are made with paint smears, and splotches, in monster type, impressionist paintings.} She taught him how to use special powers, but to only use them for good. It tells how she would hardly ever talk with anyone, or be around when the boy had friends over. But instead looked out from her cave/kitchen. Then one day when he was shopping, three boys try to steal his bag. They chase him, and take his food, and tie him to a tree. They then make fun of his mom, and he yells at them not to make fun of his mom. he then breaks the twine holding him, and chases the bad boys. His mom then hears the noise, and comes running, and demands that they make amends for what they did. She then takes the boys, and her son to her house, and they have had to help her make more food. They then are allowed to help eat what was made. Before the boys leave his home they admiringly talk about his mom in a good way.

After the story, Lucy talks about how each of the stories had a sort of magic to the story. Kino then agrees and recommends the book.

* The Secret in the Matchbox, by Val Willis, and illustrated by John Shelley. {ISBN: 0374367019}

Lucy then recommends a book.

* The Woman Who Flummoxed the Fairies, by Heather Forest, and illustrated by Susan Gaber. {ISBN: 0152991506}

Lucy, then thanks Tatyana, and Zachery, for reading to them all. They all then say goodbye to the camera, saying "Keep a Story in Your Heart".

Both episodes on the video tape were from the 1994 season of the show, and were released in two different versions of the VHS packaging. Both were released by "Video Treasures", but with different companies; "Strand Home Video" catalog # ST 1668, ISBN: 1564421619. "Anchor Bay" catalog # AB 1668, ISBN: 1564425304. The television show was produced by the Los Angeles television station KCET, which released slightly different versions of the show, on VHS tapes. Also in 1994 the show was distributed to various television stations through PBS {Public Broadcasting Service} channels in the USA.

This week, Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain what "Velcro" is, and how it works. They also explain who invented it, and the inspiration for the invention. Then they give several illustrations of "Velcro", the inventor, and the things that inspired the creation of a product out of it. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the "Velcro proprietary name". This week Jax remains silent, and gives the moral support to Beakman.

If you are in the USA "Happy Thanksgiving". Eliza Schneider returns to the spotlight this week, with a interview she did about a week ago, with the podcast talk show BroSpeak. {Sadly she doesn't mention Beakman's World, it is mostly about her work on cartoon, and video games.} She talks about her webcast workshop, "The Million Dollar Voice", scheduled for November 27, {tomorrow}, According to her website it cost $97 to attend the event/workshop, which will also be webcast. She also talks about her voice acting roles, for cartoon, and video games. She also mention that her one-women show called "Freedom of Speech", will soon be uploaded to her YouTube in 39 parts.

{See image description for link to the video interview.}

Besides talking about her career, she also suggests how people can learn about becoming a voice performer, and enjoys teaching people how to learn to speak better, when they communicate with other people. BroSpeak also interviewed Senta Moses about two months ago.

P.S. One final reminder that Jok Church's birthday is on November 28th. I hope everyone will wish him a very happy birthday, and, or try and create something special just for him.

Eliza Jane Schneider was interviewed about a week ago, on this podcast/interview show called BroSpeak. In the interview she talks about her vocal training/coaching, and voice over work for cartoons, and video games. {Sadly she doesn't mention "Beakman's World, but the host said that he hopes to do a follow-up interview in December, and hopefully she will get a chance to answer more questions.} This show also hosted Senta Moses about two months ago. The video was uploaded to BroSpeak's official YouTube channel on November 18, and it is 12 minutes and 55 seconds in length.

Eliza Jane Schneider {BroSpeak, interview}

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=i0HGofjfc0Q>

The interview begins with Eliza and the host Jim Meilof asking each other about how the other is doing. Eliza is then asked about what she enjoys doing. She says "I love my her work, I like doing voices, like doing dialects, I like teaching other people lately." She also says "I love playing my violin, and touring." She then talks about going to Vancouver, Canada to do a work shop, teaching session. She then makes a joke saying, "to teach those Canadians how to talk right. So we can stop blaming them for everything."

At 0:54 Eliza is asked when she started her 'voice over career. She explains that it started in 1997, with the television show Johnny Bravo, with her playing Penny, {however Internet Movie Data Base list her as playing a character named 'Lola'}. She then talks about how she started really getting a lot of work as a voice over artist after 199 when she appeared on 'South Park'.

Then at 1:26, Eliza is asked about how she auditions for the acting voice over roles. She mentions that William Morris {Endeavor Entertainment} an acting agency usually sends her an email with the dialog. Eliza also says that she likes to write on the script, and make notes about the character, and she is trying to figure out a way to avoid doing that. She then asks the viewers if they know of any software that she can write on the screen, but she says she doesn't have a pad, {iPad type thing, probably}. She then records the dialog on a MP3 format and sends it back to the agency. She tells how, "and I never have to interact with anyone until I get the job. And I don't have to drive, which is nice. I used to be on camera all the time, and I used to have to drive everywhere all over Hollywood, which sucked."

Eliza is then at 2:28, asked about if she ever got to create her own voice for characters, as opposed to having to speak in a certain manner. She says yes that she gets to do that most of the time. But Eliza then mentions how she sometimes has to match someone else's voice like when she took over the roles in "South Park", and then she lists several of the characters she played on the show, and voices she created for other shows like the Squirrel Boy character "Martha".

Next at 3:25 there is a question about the voices she enjoys doing the most. She says it is Shelly {Marsh}, from South Park. Eliza then talks about a woman that she interviewed as part of her dialect research. She tells how the interviewed woman talked about having a rash, and got a biopsy, and then about how the lady then realized what she had said {told to a complete stranger}. Eliza says, "She was just so, so fun. So, anyone that I interviewed how I absolutely adore. I ultimately adore doing their voice", she then talks about doing a Scottish troll voice for the video game "World of Warcraft".

At 4:58 she is asked about how she got started doing voice over work. She then talks about her one-woman show called "Freedom of Speech", and that she will "be releasing on my YouTube channel ElizaJane2020, ah, as an episodic, coming up soon. There are 39 episodes separate episodes in a ninety minute play, that was recorded. It's a three camera shoot. She then tells of doing a 45 minute version for the show for a talent agency, at ICM {Partners}. Eliza then talks about doing voice matching for Hollywood, saying "where you are always voice matching a celebrity, in order to do the stuff they don't want to do for video games, or whatnot." She then mentions doing that for "Pirates of the Caribbean" actress Elizabeth Swann, and Liv Tyler from the Lord of the Rings, which she also had to learn how to pronounce the fictional Elvish language. Eliza then tells how she, "just really adore real human being who aren't in the public eye {people that aren't famous}." Eliza then talks about a black woman she interviewed, and did an impression/voice matching for her one-woman show. Eliza, as the other women, talks about lawyers treating black people differently than they do white people.

The host at 7:46 asks Eliza about difficulties with voice acting. Eliza mentions the being beaten up scenes where the character has to scream a lot. She then tells how she was a 'classically trained opera singer', and she learned to take care of her voice after performing those recordings.

At 8:45, she is asked if she is ever asked to appear on a show, as a certain character, without an audition. She says "every now and then, yeah, that does happen."

Then at 9:12, Eliza is asked about her favorite parts of voice acting. Eliza says she enjoys the research for the part. Going through dialects, and listening to her recordings to find interesting sounding dialects she can use for a character. She then talks about how performing as the characters is also fun, and that she played a character in the "The Mr. Peabody & Sherman Show" which was an opera singer.

At 10:05, Eliza is asked to promote where information about her can be found online. She talks about her YouTube channel, Twitter, and Facebook, all with her nickname ElizaJane2020. She then talks about teaching a live workshop, called "The Million Dollar Voice", in a webcast on November 27, 2015. She tells that it is not just for voice acting, it is also to help anyone such as doctors, or lawyers, that want to learn to speak better. She says she will be posting more information on that on her Facebook page, and that she also recommends visiting her webpage.

Lastly at 11:38, she is asked about if she has advise for people who are interested in her career. Eliza says "just have fun. You know, people take this stuff so seriously, but you know if you want to do voices definitely check out my website." She then goes on to explain that she is always posting on Facebook, links to videos, and seminars, for people wishing to learn about voice acting. She ends by saying "Have fun, and follow your dreams." They then say goodbye to each other, and that they hope to see each other again soon.

Andy Jakcsy Senta Moses was also interviewed by BroSpeak a couple of months ago, and she did talk about Beakman's World a little bit: Specifically the scariest segment she participated in (the segment with the lion.)

Tyler Anderson Yeah I saw that also, and mentioned it in the image description. Hopefully I will get around to doing a summary of that video, soon also. But it is fairly long, and it might take me a while to research all the things she mentions. I like to give people a chance to know what was said, and a little background on some of the projects they worked on, even if they don't mention those things in the interview. I also like making a summary in case the reader don't get to see it, as if it gets deleted someday, or the person wanting to see it, doesn't know spoken English, they can read the summary, by placing my summary text in a translator.

It just depends on how much time I have each week, sometimes it is a short Paul Zaloom interview I find on YouTube, or other short interview of one of the cast members, simply because I didn't have much time to make a summary of something like "Alive and Kicking: 55. Paul Zaloom", which I'd probably have to ask the creator of the series, if I could use images from it.

Once a month I also try to post on our other page "Castelo Rá-Tim-Bum, Entusiastas" but there I have to rely mostly on my co-host to understand what was said in the interviews.

He is a equal rights, and social activist, and has wrote, and published a series of videos on YouTube about current social events happening in the news, in a series of videos called "Urgent Cultural Update". He also did a TED talk called "A Circle of Caring".

Jok originally named Beakman Place after a street in New York, and it first the comic only featured Beakman, but his twin sister Jax was later introduced. He originally created the comic strip using a early Macintosh computer. Some of the early comics were later published into book form with one comic covering three pages of the books. Besides these Jok also wrote two specialty books with Beakman and Jax, one about Bubbles, and another one about Microscopes.

After his husband died of AIDS, Jok used the HIV genome to create a musical collage for the raw data file. He later created a second recording of the sound of rain called "Peaceful Rainstorm". He also worked with, and for, the artists Christo Vladimirov Javacheff, and Jeanne-Claude. Jok recently had a gallery show of his erotica artwork, and he also created two short erotica art films, which about a year ago, were screened in China for the first time.

He got diabetes at a young age, and had a heart attack while the first season of Beakman's World was being recorded, he was also writer for several of those episodes. In Beakman's World Season 1, Episode 4, there is a question by his mother about veins. Jok also dedicated his book "You Can With Beakman & Jax: Beakman & Jax's Microscope Book, "For Flow Mills".

This is a image I made for Jok's Birthday November 28, 2015. It features the Beakman's World Cast as well as the Body Works cast. Here Alanna Ubach plays the part of 'Pilar', the girl with the ice cream cone hair tie, as well as Jose. Pilar's boyfiend, auto mechanic 'Max', is the character saluting. Paul Zaloom is Beakman, as he is finishing a "You Can with Beakman and Jax" comic, which features Jax, Beakman's sister. Paul also plays Meekman, {the brother of Beakman}, holding a bandage kit. Jean Stapleton plays Beakmom, the mother of Beakman, Meekman, and Jax. Louis Pearl {The Amazing Bubble Man} gives the thumbs-up for Jok. Don and Herb take a look at the comic. Phobe, is Senta Moses, popping up with a smile to fish Jok a Happy Birthday. Liza, played by Eliza Jane Schneider, is awestruck by the fact that it was over 20 years ago the show and comic were first released. Lester, played by Mark Ritts is awestruck as well, "just because, it is better then be 'struck' by lightening again".

To the right is a enlarged image of what Beakman is working on at the time. He is about to explain how comics are made, and he, Jax, and Jok the animated, {from Jok's "Urgent Cultural Update" video series}. I clipped his head, and the bolo tie, similar to Beakman, and then realized the tie looked like feet, so I drew in some hands, above the tie slider. Lastily there is a drawing of a life like person, {the real Jok, really created by Jok}, and a canyon type background created by me.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain why we burp. There is a explanation of balance, and that the stomach tries to reach a balance. The reader is also cautioned not to force it to burp.

There is then a suggestion to look up the word "borborygmus", and then a explanation of it, and the sound water bottle makes hen it is only slightly full, and the water is moved around. There is then a explanation of some of the gasses that are released when people and animals burp. Lastly there is a comparison of the body's digestive system, with that of a food processor. There are illustrations of Yin and Yang symbol {but without the central dots}, a wave in a bottle of water. Then there are two illustrations of the digestive system, showing how air, and pressure, are equalized within the stomach.

This week Beakman gives the explanation, while Jax gives the moral support and remains silent.

Sometimes, you just get too full. Not of food, but also of the air we swallow with that food; and that air needing to get somewhere works until it does get out — up or down. Had a lovely weekend and hope you did too.

Senta Moses takes center stage this week, with a interview she did for the "BroSpeak" podcast, by Jim Meilof. She talks about Beakman's World, and other television shows, and movies she worked on.

{See image description for link to video, and a official link to watch episodes of a show she was on before Beakman's World, called "My So-Called Life", and a series called "Greek".}

Senta talks about how she started working as a actor in commercials at six month of age, and some of her earliest work. She also talks about having a lion in the studio when filming Beakman's World, and that it pounced on the meat that accidently fell on the floor. She talks about other animals on the show, and how she learned a lot about science from the show. She mentions Jean Stapleton {Beakmom}, and I even explain a connection between Senta Moses, and the singer Julie Christensen, Senta worked with Julie's future husband in one of her early movies.

This is a series of screenshots from a interview of Senta Moses on the "BroSpeak" podcast, by Jim Meilof. In the interview she talks about many of the television shows, and films she has been in, as well as plays, and commercials advertisements, she has been in. She even talks about Beakman's World. Besides this interview with Senta, the host Jim Meilof, and BroSpeak interviewed Eliza Jane Schneider, a few months later. This video of Senta's interview was uploaded to BroSpeak's official YouTube channel on August 25, 2015, and it is 35 minutes and 46 seconds in length.

Senta Moses {BroSpeak, interview}

The video begins with the host Jim Meilof, welcoming the viewer to the podcast, and introducing Senta. She then says "Hello", and they ask how the other is doing. Jim's first interview question is about why Senta "first stepped foot into" her career. Senta explains that, she starred in a diaper commercial at 6 months old, and had been acting ever since. She talks about growing up as a actor, and also makes a joke about being one of the few child actors, without a drug problem. She then talks about finishing school in Chicago, and moving to L.A. {Los Angeles, California} to continue her career.

At 0:54 Jim asks Senta about what the first movies and television shows she appeared in. Senta then talks about being in the movie "The Blues Brothers" where she wore a Mickey Mouse T-shirt, and danced in a scene while Ray Charles, {a famous blind musician} played the piano, and she danced on a car in the street. She then talks about being in a musical play called "Nefertiti" which seems to have been preformed from 1977-1978, and then closed. {There is a "Original Cast Recording" soundtrack, but I am not sure if Senta Moses is on it, or she might have started after the album was recorded. Senta then says she can't remember what her first television show was, that she was in. {However, I have seen that she appeared on "The Phil Donahue Show" with Sammy Davis Jr. probably between 1977-1981. He seems to have appeared on the show several times.}}

Then at 1:42 Senta is asked about the shows she is known most for. She says that recognizes mostly from a she called "My So-Called Life" where she played a character called 'Delia Fisher' who was introduced in episode 11, sadly the show only lasted 19 hour long {44 minutes, without commercials} episodes, she was a guest star, and seems to have only appeared in episodes 11, 17, and 19.

The episodes currently are officially available to watch for free on Hulu, and the "Internet Movie Database". However region restrictions might prevent the videos from loading if you live outside the USA.

Senta then talks about people recognizing her from, her appearances in the shows "Greek" and "Faking It". She then mentions that she was on her honeymoon in Switzerland and a fan recognized her from the "Faking It" show.

At 2:32, Jim mentions how unique her name is, and she explains that the name is Scandinavian, but she only knows that the meaning of it {Senta} is 'a feeling', but she is not sure what feeling it is meant to represent.

Next at 3:17 Jim asks Senta about interesting shows she was in. She talks about a movie called "D.C. Cab" {D.C. meaning Washington, D.C., for the "District of Columbia" the capitol district of the USA, in which the film takes place.} Senta's character in the movie gets kidnapped, and at age 11, she then she gets to use swear words in a movie. And a social worker didn't want a child to swear but Senta's parents weren't worried about her saying the lines. {As a side note, Julie Christensen's current husband John Diehl was the actor in this movie, where he played the kidnapper, this was about 10 years before Julie married him. Both Julie and Senta appeared on Beakman's World, but on different episodes.} Senta then talks about getting the job of playing the character "Molly" in the theater touring musical play "Annie". She explains that she was cast for the role when she was 6, but didn't get to start until she was 7 years old, because they were not allowed to tour at that young a age. She says "That was kind of crazy, to be on tour for thirteen months, all over the country." {Senta also appeared in a documentary film about where many of the actresses went after they appeared in the "Annie" musical, the film was called "Life After Tomorrow".}

Saying "When I walked on set for 'Faking It', it was like coming home to a family. Because I knew a lot of crew members, and a lot of the producers."

Jim at 5:37 asks a question from Brandon Zelman, a former guest he interviewed. Brandon wanted to know if there was any danger in the experiments on Beakman's World. Senta then talks about how a lion was on set with them, and the trainer was waving a stick with meat on it, and the meat fell off the stick, and the lion pounced on it. She says, "That was the only moment that I felt, like 'Oh Wow'. Um, the rest of the animals were just quirky and fun, and the experiments were so exciting, like, I learned a lot on that show". She then says "So, that was really cool, to learn all that science." The second part of the question was about a fear of things exploding on the set of Beakman's World. Senta says "It was more messy then dangerous."

She then goes on to talk about how the shows main star, Ray Romano liked to adlib his lines of dialog, which was difficult for her because she would laugh. This week, Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain the difference between the study of astronomy, and the myths and predictions of astrology. There is a illustration of the apparent star groupings known as constellations, and how they make up the zodiac, and a explanation as to how the sun seems to appear in different parts of the sky, at different times. There is then a example of how one constellation appears on the sky, and another image of what that area looks like in greater magnification. With a explanation, that the image is looking towards the center of our galaxy. Lastly there is a suggestion that the reader research the topic "zodiac myth". This week Beakman gives the answer, while Jax gives the moral support and remains silent.

Have you ever wondered what Paul's early work was, before Beakman's World? This week, a few days before Paul's birthday, I wanted to share this image of some of the things that he and others presented at the "Bread and Puppet Theater", a group of artists, and performers based in a farm at Glover, Vermont. Paul began working with them while he was still in college, and he continues to occasionally work with them, and appear in their shows. In this video several performances by Paul, can be seen. As a comedic presenter of factual data, a drummer, and also as the Ringmaster of their 'Circus' presentation, which Paul hosted, with his daughter Amanda. There are also several segments without Paul in them.

This is a collection of screenshots, from a home video recording of the "Bread and Puppet Theater" performances, in June 1991, at their Glover, Vermont farm. It shows various elements of their productions, from a sample of their puppet pageant, to the Circus, and sideshow events. Paul Zaloom and his daughter Amanda are the ringmasters, and there is also footage of Paul's sideshow about a military commander giving a educational talk to the troops before they go by plane to Saudi Arabia. The only part not actually at the farm seems to be the Demolition Derby, which seems to be a event that was held away from the farm, sometime between the other events in the video.

Bread and Puppet: BP9106 {Bread and Puppet, 1991 June}, Bread and Puppet, DeeDee Halleck, {Peter and} Tamar Schumann

* <https://archive.org/details/BP9106>

The video begins with what seems to be the early tests of the mother Earth, {a head, hands and arms} type puppet being carried through the fields.

At 02:00 there is footage of a demolition derby.

At 5:20 There is footage of Paul Zaloom's army troop preparations, talk. He gives the talk to a group of people in the farm's theater, as if they are troops about to go to another country. He reads two different government booklets, about how the soldiers should behave, and what they should be cautious about in the new country.

He talks about that the flight is supposed to be on a 747 wide body, as scheduled. He talks about three DOA {Department of Army} publications, and their viewers AOR {Area of Responsibility}, later revealed to be {The Theater of Operations, or The farmhouse they are watching the show in}.

At 6:05, the first real book, that he reads from is called "Untied States, Central Command: Troop Information Handbook". The first fact he points out is about things that Muslims usually aren't supposed to eat or drink. It list various forms of pig meat. He then mentions when drinking coffee not to drink the "sludge on the bottom".

Next at 6:52, there is a section on helpful words they might like to know. The answer given for, how they are doing, is sort of funny. It is written as if they are thankful they are not dead yet.

This is followed at 7:06, by, a word that people should understand the meaning for. The word is about money, but could be misunderstood in English to be about sex.

He then shows that the book a says at, 7:55, Nomads {wandering people there}, may not fit into modern 'schemes' {ways of life}. Which is also a word used in English to represent mischievous behavior, that is kept secret. Paul jokes about the viewers developing their own {mischievous} schemes.

Then at 8:14, there is a quote from the book about women and men not touching. But that the men there hold hands and touch often, but it is because they are "good friends". {Possibly hinting at, that they are not gay.} Paul makes a joke about the sentence, as it seems to be meant for people, who enjoy hurting other people, and that they should not be abusive about this gay type of behavior. Even though those mean people might usually do that type of behavior when they are here in the USA.

At 8:42, Paul shows a list of things that the soldiers are not supposed to take with them, such as religious materials, and sex related images. Then he shows a list of things that they aren't supposed to talk about, and one of them is about future plans to make more army bases, in the area, and long term plans to stay there. {Which is something that wasn't supposed to happen, but eventually did happen. And the message saying not to mention it, is seen as proof that it was the plan all the time.}

Paul then at 9:05 shows things that the soldier is not supposed to do, and they are told not to act like a "Ugly American". Paul jokes about waiting until they get home where they can act like that when they like.

At 9:20 he shows where it mentions that soldiers should search their cloths for "Critters" {bugs, insects, or other animals}, before putting on the cloths. And a reminder not to play with snakes.

He then at 9:32 talks about if the soldier is taken hostage, and things that they should, and shouldn't talk about to their captors such as sports. but then Paul jokes about sports that probably shouldn't be talked about such as water sports, and football {rugby}.

Next at 10:02 Paul talks about things that soldiers are not allowed to bring home. Such as weapons, drugs, and the sex related images they weren't allowed to bring to begin with.

The next publication at 10:34 is a wallet card that explains why "Why We are Here", with quotes from the then president of the USA, George Bush. Paul jokes about it saying they are there for peaceful reasons, and then only to defend. There is then a joke video projection slide placed on the screen. It mentions giving money to gay people instead of, {possibly} non-europeans. And that the soldiers should act mischievous. {Presumably it is a soldier that sneaked the projection slide into the machine in a mischievous way.} Paul then goes on to show the actual back side of the government published card, which says "While We Are Here". And lists things that the soldier is supposed to do, and at the very end tells them not to show any interest in Arab {Arabian} women.

The third publication, at 11:48 called "Battle Fatigue: Normal, Common Signs. What to Do, for self and buddy". First he reads the part about leadership, and their role in preventing Battle Fatigue {BF}. The book says that anyone that get it is a casualty {also the word for dead, or someone injured}. Then the next sentence is about bringing them back, as soon as possible, {sounding a bit like bringing them back from the dead}. He then mentions how it tells how to prevent BF by talking about it, and making jokes about it. So Paul then makes a joke about a traveling salesman with BF, and then he stops, half way through the joke and says he will tell them it later, {but he doesn't get back to it at least in this video}. There is then a section about reliving stress, such as taking a deep breath and shrugging the shoulders. Next a quote about alcohol, and waiting until later to use it. Lastly there is a quote about bad behavior that is not BF, and is instead "Combat Stress Reactions" {CSR}. Paul jokes about if any of the soldiers are caught doing any of those things, they should remember to claim that they are CSR and not BF.

Paul at 3:20 Paul thanks the soldiers/audience members, and tells them to have a good flight, and a good war". Paul's section ends at 13:27.

At 13:28, there is a view of a Bread and Puppet sculpture, and a woman and baby identified in the videos description as "Trudi and baby Isaac".

Next at 14:48, the National Exploration Society's Summer Expedition. They then pretend to get lost next to the statue, all while inside a tent. They then find a native American and blind fold them, and make them sign away their property rights. They then quietly sneak away, after planting a flag behind the native. The native person still blindfold, tries to find they're way around, and takes off the blindfold and seems to get sick and die.

Then at 20:28, there is a segment, staged like a game show, called "Wheel of Destruction", {a parody of the name "Wheel of Fortune"}. It's fictional host is Pat Savage-Attack, {a parody of the name 'Pat Sajak'}. While playing the game, they teach history, with the subject of "Mode of Production". The first question is about the name "Pequod" the name of a ship in a wale hunting novel "Moby Dick". He then says how it is because the author wanted people to remember the native Americans cheated out of their land. There is then a quote from Karl Max, about money. There is then quotes from a early colonists named Tomas Morton, John Winthrop, and John Cotton. The host then talks about the Pequod, standing up for themselves and their land. Next a quote from probably John Mason, the host then explains that after the colonists took the land, they had to justify it, there is then quotes from Horace Greeley, and Theodore Roosevelt. There are then a few jump cuts, as if the recorder wasn't working properly, and then it jumps to them explaining a miniature version of the village, that would be set on fire as the colonists did to the native American village. They only mention setting it on fire, and that this is just a model of what happened. During the talk they turn the game show wheel from "Destruction" to "Justification", and to what might be "Forgetting".

This is followed, at 26:10 by footage of cows out in the woods.

At 27:24 there are several people mostly children getting scoops of ice cream from a box. The video description says they are "Newark kids", and that "Chuck and Jenny get ice cream too". The camera then shows various things around the kitchen.

Next at 29:39, there is rehearsal footage of the performers preparing for the "Bread and Puppet, Domestic Resurrection Circus", event. With singing and dancing with sythes. According to the video's description, the song's title, or presentation is called "This Solid World Will All Be on Fire".

At 35:44 the band begins playing "Happy Birthday to You" and they surprise someone named Sarah by singing her the song.

The flag runners begin their rehearsal at 37:15, and at 38:22 Amanda and Paul Zaloom, do their welcome message. "Ladies and Gentlemen, welcome to the 19th annual "Bread and Puppet, Domestic Resurrection Circus".

Paul then returns to center of the ring at 39:18, and talks about recent events in the Soviet Union. They are staging a economic summit meeting of the seven richest nations. The actors {six of them} then come into the ring, with their own poor people, praising the rich people as if they were royalty. Then a group of rowdy everyday people come in making noise and interrupting the events. A rich person gets them to sing a version of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee". They then become rowdy once again, and this time they are stopped by the music being played off key, and the rowdy people act as if they are in pain when hearing it. There is then a brief pause as they get acting suggestions, and they preform the scene again. The rich man then wakes them up, and they follow him like zombies, while he dances about. They then make a circle and dance around him, according to his direction. He then takes his final bow, and then they begin to attack like zombies, but he stops then and distracts them with what is probably a coin or some other money, and he gets away, as they al try to get it. They then all run off. At 46:11, Paul can be seen playing the drum, and dancing about. A guy then dressed as a bull then inters the circle where the children dance, and they march forward and strike as if bull fighters.

Next at 46:32 there is a musical section featuring children dancing and singing "Ole!"

At 49:11, there is a guy on top of one of the two parked busses. He taunts the actors, in a high pitched squeaky voice. {Possibly he was the guy that played the bull, and got way from the children}. He then pretends to be hit by something that is thrown at him, and he jumps behind a curtain on top of the bus.

Next at 49:47 their are three boys marching, in a parody of the painting "The Spirit of '76" by Archibald Willard, but instead of another drum, one of the boys is pretending to hold a flag, they lead a march of children into the ring. Then there is a choir singing, for rehearsal. {The songs name isn't mention in the description.}

Masked men enter the ring at 53:49, and seem to aimlessly look about, with their paper mache masks.

The show begins at 54:24, as the buses drive up to the ring. And the parade of people comes from another direction, lead in part, by Paul Zaloom playing the drums, and his daughter Amanda. The crowd of people also includes people walking on stilts, and others carrying various pieces of equipment. The main curtain of the event calls it "Our Domestic Resurrection Circus.

The video at 56:38, then jumps to the flag runs {this time with their flags. It then cuts again to the welcome message.

Then at 57:00 Paul and Amanda, as ringmasters, introduce the "Bread and Puppet, Domestic Resurrection Circus". It cuts away again, to just when Paul is running back out to the center of the ring.

Next at 57:54, the people with masks on, are seen talking and shaking hands with people wearing silver foil suits and big sculpted heads. {This is the economic summit meeting seen before.} The rowdy people this time are red devils, with horns and tails. According to the video description Peter Hamburger plays the part of George Bush, president, trying to calm the rowdy people, then running away. It then jumps ahead again to the bag of money and the rowdy people following Bush like zombies. Just before he takes his final bow, the scene jump cuts again.

At 1:01:12 the main curtain is pulled to the side again to show the children coming out for the bull fight, but this time they are on stilts. The guy pretending to be the bull, has a bull costume now also. More of the show is now seen, as the bull charges at the various red muleta, of the bull fighters.

The video goes to a blank, black screen at 1:04:18, and remains blank until the end of the video.

Every month or so I get a letter asking this same question from a woman in her 90s who has never once used her own name to sign the letter, nor the envelope.. She kind of whines that I never answer her question, always reminding me she is not a "Kid." Her last name was taken from the return postage sticker — also a first. I hope she, whatever her real name is gets to see this. -Jok

Paul Zaloom's birthday

December 14, 2015

On December 14, 1951 Paul Finley Zaloom {Paul Zaloom} was born. He enjoys flea market type brick-a-brack. He collected anything that looked interesting, and while in college came to find the 'Bread and Puppet Theater' where he eventually became their ringmaster for their annual 'Circus' show. He then went on to perform his 'found object' theater, something he would incorporate into the show 'Beakman's World' which he was cast in as the main host. Later he helped create two films 'In Smog and Thunder' and 'Dante's Inferno' which had cutout puppets as it's characters. He still tours and lectures as Beakman. Wish him a Happy Birthday!!!

This is a image I made about the connections between the new Star Wars movie, and its links to Beakman's World, and the comic strip, You Can with Beakman and Jax.

First there is Jok Curch, who also used to work with the creator of Star Wars, George Lucas.

Second there the film "The Blues Brothers". In which Senta Moses appeared in a Mickey Mouse shirt, she was not credited in the movie for her appearance, as one of the dancers. Also featured in the movie was Carrie Fisher, whom also plays in the new Star Wars film, "Star Wars: Episode VII, The Force Awakens.

JR Church I think Carrie carried much of Star Wars VII which -- thank 6he force -- Mr. Lucas had nothing to do with. "Metephors be wth you."

Big birthday today; the iconoscope. The what? Well, it used to be like a hose that sprayed electrons onto a wall of chemicals that glowed when hit with those electrons. The hose sprayed in back and forth sideways lines. And most the ones made today don't have hoses and the lines usually can't be seen. The iconoscope became known as the television — TV — the thing lots of us now, oddly, watch in our telephones.

To celebrate the New Year 2016, I thought I'd share a quick look at this video, which features Mark Ritts as a Doctor. It was uploaded by Jay Dubin.

{See image description for link to video.}

I usually try not to share videos, when I am not sure how they were originally released, or if they are part of a film, or television series. But this was uploaded by Jay Dubin, which was more then likely, involved in its production.

This is a video segment posted by Jay Dubin to Facebook, on August 25, 2015. It features Mark Ritts, as a "Doctor", similar to his character in Beakman's World. In the video Mark talks about a fictional disease. It is presented as if part of a "Public Service Announcement" {PSA}. Jay Dubin was director in most of the episodes of Beakman's World. It is 2 minutes, and 7 seconds in length.

Andermal Krakatosis

* <https://www.facebook.com/jay.dubin.7/videos/vb.1391308696/10205105075251793>

The unnamed doctor, begins by talking about the "most devastating" human ailment "Andermal Krakatosis" a parody of the words {Adrenal Glands and Krakatoa, a volcano.} He then goes on to explain what the disease does, such as "inflammation the entire {fictional word}, but catastrophic degeneration of the {fictional}, and {fictional}." He then compares it to another fictional disease, and gives its symptoms, and explains how it responds to a fictional treatment, while "Andermal Krakatosis" does not. He then talks about if a person gets this disease that they are "in for the battle of you life." He then gives the symptoms and suggestions on what to do, if a person thinks they may have the disease. He then quotes a person that had the disease. "Ah, ah, my {fictional} and {fictional}, feel like they are burning, with the white heat of a hundred suns." He then goes on to say that it can't be cured but that the disease can be managed with a fictional treatment. He then suggest that with "the continued bookulity {fictional, Utilizing of books/study} researchers everywhere 'Andermal Krakatosis' will one day take its place along side vanquished human scourges such as, {fictional}, and {fictional}."

It is not apparent if this was part of a television show, movie, or other promotional video. There are no credits, to tell when it was recorded, or if Jay himself directed it. At the end of the video, background voices can be heard.

There is a explanation of the colors of light, followed by a example of the visible color spectrum. There are facts about clouds at some times seeming to be black, and a explanation of light scattering. There is a experiment to try involving a glass bowl, and a flash light. There is also a quick fact about light of different colors changing the clouds to different colors.

There is a background illustration of many clouds, a pink cloud, and a diagram showing the amount of air that light has to travel from the side as apposed to from directly above the Earth's surface. There is also a nice image of the reader labeled as "You". Lastly there is a suggestion to research the word "wavelength".

With all of the singing on Beakman's World, did you ever wonder if Paul Zaloom, had ever appeared on a musical album? Well the answer is... Sort of... he was on a album called "Motor City Music for Minors" by "The Re-Bops". 11 of the songs are listed on the back of the CD, without track numbers or running time of the album. In it Paul Zaloom played a radio announcer on four tracks; 1, 18, 19, and 35. Sadly Paul himself does not sing on the album.

This is a story/music album, called "Motor City Music For Minors", by The Re-Bops. It is based around linking 11 various Motown Records songs together in a framework story. Paul Zaloom appears in four of the albums tracks, 1, 18, 19, and 35, as a radio announcer. The main story centers around a postwoman and the people she meets on her mail route. They all have various problems, and the postwoman helps them solve their problems.

#PaulZaloom #TheReBops #ReBopRecords

{The various songs, and tracks, can be sampled {parts of the song can be listened to, for free} on Amazon, iTunes and other websites.}

The story begins with the announcer Paul Zaloom, explaining that they are about to listen to a radio play, presented by the fictional "Melody Mouthwash" company.

The story then goes to the postwoman meeting a group of girls, as they sing "Please Mr. Postman". And one of the girls is upset with a boy. After the song "Too Many Fish In The Sea" the postwoman continues on her way.

Next she meets a girl who's dog just ran away, and the song "Stop! In The Name Of Love", is heard. Then the postwoman promises to help look for the dog.

As the postwoman is looking for the dog she meets a group of boys, and one of them is the boy, which the earlier girl was upset with. The boy is also upset with that girl. After the song "Shop Around" she realises she can't help, and the boy will have to decide what to do on his own, and then as she is about to leave she sees the dog, and makes it return home. The story then follows the dog, and the girl owner, as she tells him she will have to go to school, and the song "Ain't Too Proud To Beg" is heard, as the dog asks her to stay home.

There is then a intermission by Paul, as he talks about the mouth wash, and if the postwoman can really help these people.

The girl then has to go to school, and the dog is left at home. At school the girl hears the songs "ABC", and "You Can't Hurry Love", in music class.

The story then returns to the dog, and the postwoman, and after becoming friends, she leaves and meets the boy again.

The boy then sings "Tears Of A Clown", and then asks for her, from the postwoman. He goes to apologize to the girl, and then finds that the girl was also on her way to apologize to him. The song "Signed, Sealed, And Delivered", is then heard.

The story ends with the boy and girl becoming friends again, and the dog and owner going on more walks so the dog can visit a female friend. The song "You've Got What It Takes" is also sung. There is then one final song "How Sweet It Is (To Be Loved by You)" with the postwoman and the children.

The final track features Paul, and tells the listener to tune into the fictional radio station again for next weeks story, and then gives a advertisement for the mouthwash again.

After making this album in 1998, the producer Diana Winn Levine, was later hospitalized in 2000, and lost her right arm, below the elbow, because of a reaction to a prescription drug. Paul Zaloom made a video testimonial for Diana Levine. The video was to raise awareness of a drug company's "inadequate labeling" of a product. In the video he talks about working with her, and the effect it had on her work. Diana eventually won the court case, against the drug company in 2009.

Beakman's World - Paul Zaloom Interview

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=THI25Rgpq_I

The Paul Zaloom interview begins at 52:26, or 00:00, if you are listening to the mp3, or the YouTube version. After greeting each other the host, Dustin Wilmes tells Paul, that it is "It's a honor to have you on our show, and I appreciate you taking the time out". Dustin's first question is, why Paul wanted to "get into the entertainment business, and become an actor?" Paul then talks about seeing the theater play "Oliver!", based on the book "Oliver Twist" by Charles Dickens. Paul wanted to be like the kids in the play, he then says he also saw Victor Borge a Danish comedian. Paul then talks about being in school plays, even when he was in kindergarten. Paul then calls himself "a natural ham bone" {person that likes to be funny, and entertain people}.

At 53:28 Paul is asked about how he got interested in puppetry. He then talks about being interested in puppets as a kid, but that it wasn't until he was in Goddard College, in Plainfield, Vermont. There he got to take some workshops with "The Bread and Puppet Theater" group of performers, and later joined their group. Paul then talks about playing all the parts, designing his own puppets, wrote the material, and tried to sell it on tours. Paul says, "it's perfect for a megalomaniacal, egotist, lunatic, like Beakman {Paul himself}."

Next at 54:22 the host asks if Paul thinks puppetry is a fading art, and that new things like computer animation are making it go away. Paul then talks about there being a revival of interest in puppets, and point out the things happening the towns of Minneapolis, and Saint Paul, in Minnesota. He then talks how there are a lot of puppet companies in that part of the country, and around the world. He then credits the programs at the O'Neil Center {Eugene O'Neill Theater Center}, CalArts {California Institute of the Arts}, and in the Yukon. Paul then says most people are used to computer animation, but puppetry is a novelty. He then goes on to say; "Puppetry will live forever, that's for sure."

This is followed at 56:00 by a question about how those things lead the way to the show Beakman's World. Paul then talks about how the usual actors in Hollywood didn't seem right for the part, and Jay Dubin knew Paul from his time in New York, and that Paul and Jay even tried to sell an idea to the television channel HBO {Home Box Office}. Jay then remembered Paul. Paul then talks about a comedy/informational slideshow, about food, he was performing at the time. Paul sent the casting people that video, and in it he wore a labcoat type jacket. He then talks about how they gave him a audition that okay, but not great, until he spilled a beaker {glass lab jar} of water, and began to improvise around the accident. "And boom {suddenly} I got the job."

Then at 57:32 the host, Dustin asks about if Paul learned about science as the show progressed, or if he already knew some of it. Paul explains that he always liked natural science. He then talks about being out in the open fields and the woods {forests}. He has also liked Neuroscience, and mentions his stage show "Beakman on the Brain: Everything You Ever Wanted to Know About the Brain, but Were Thinking too Much to Ask". He then says how he uses puppets in the show, a slideshow, and video, while performing as Beakman. He then says "I am passionately interested, I'm fascinated with the science of the brain."

Dustin then, at 58:46 asks if Paul thinks there will ever be another similar show like Beakman's World. Paul says "That's way over, it's not going to happen again." And then he explains how much it cost to make each episode, estimating that it was about $200,000 - $250,000 for each episode. He then says that most of the new children's shows are aimed at the moms of the children that watch the shows, and the shows aren't made for the children. He then tells about travelogues, and nature shows with handsome guys presenting the information, so that the mothers will want to watch. He then says how he doesn't think there will be any more shows like Beakman's World, Bill Nye {Bill Nye the Science Guy}, or Pee-Wee's Playhouse.

At 1:00:02 Paul is asked if the cost is why the show ended. Paul says no, it was because they had made 91 episodes and the stations could rerun the episodes, and they were made so that the information wouldn't seem out of date, and in that way could be rerun over and over again.

Next at 1:00:46 Dustin asks if there will be a DVD release of the episodes. Before the question can be answered, they then talk about how popular the show is in South America, and Mexico. Paul then mentions how people in those places react to his appearances. He then says "what really explains the passion, I think, is... When the children watch the show, the performer, the character Beakman made direct address {spoke} to the camera. The character talked to the kids through the camera, and he was very, very close to the camera. So it was very intimate, and you know, it was funny, and compelling visually, and interesting ways in disseminating the stuff. But I think that eye contact, that closeness, and warmth of it, that's what made people so fanatical about it down there. And also, there is something about the sensibility of the show, that kind of meets that Latin sensibility, but I can't really explain it, because I don't understand it. And lastly there was nothing on the air, down there, that was anything like it.

Dustin at 1:02:55 mentions Paul's other work such as workshops, and classes for teacher. Paul says how he likes using power point presentations with slideshows. Saying that he uses Keynote {presentation software} for Mac, and it is like "Telling stories with pictures".

At 1:03:52 Paul is asked how people sign up for those classes, and how places can request one of his appearances. And Paul talks about his BeakmanLive website. He then says how he loves touring and traveling.

Then at 1:04:18, Paul remembers a earlier question, and talks about how the show is not on television in the USA anymore. He then explains that compared to shows like "Seinfeld" that earn the studio lots of money in reruns, Beakman's World never did that well. And it probably wasn't worth it for the studio, to release such things. He then goes on to mention that the studio did give permission for him to do a series of Public Service Announcements {PSA} through the American Embassy in Mexico City. He says "this has been a great thing that they are allowing us to use the character and go on television and show these PSA's about science, technology, engineering and math, initiatives for women and girls." "So that's a great thing that the studio has done, and that I think they should be very proud of.

Next at 1:05:30 Dustin asks Paul about if he thought he would still be performing as Beakman all these years later. Paul says that he never thought about it. He then explains that it wasn't like being on stage with the audience in front of him, it was more like a factory job, but he got paid pretty well, and occasionally saw himself on television, if he woke up early enough. "So I wasn't thinking about the future, I had no idea that it would actually effect people, in a way that they would take on careers as scientists. I just figured, okay it's a way to bolster science education for kids in school, you know, a collaborator with libraries and teachers, and parents, to get kids involved in science. But I never thought that, umm you know, that hundreds of thousands, or millions of people would be inspired, and would love the thing. And lead the people into being neuroscientists, and doctors, science teachers, and biologists, and physicist. I had no idea. So, it's really been amazing, and I'm very grateful, ah, for the privilege of having been a part of all of it."

The next question at 1:07:12 is about Bill Nye, and if there was any rivalry between the shows. Paul mentions that Bill once said that Paul isn't really a scientist. Paul says he does not think that matters as long as he can communicate science, and its principles. Saying "I think his show was great, our show was great, and anything that is compelling on TV about science is great, and that is really sincerely how I feel. The more the merrier." Then he says "It's more interesting, to see what effect we can have as individual artists. And what we can do, um, you know, to change things, and make things better for folks. Particularly in countries that are emerging, you know, third world countries. That's very exciting."

At 1:08:50 Paul is asked if he wants to promote any of his projects. He then talks about doing a tour of Mexico high schools in February. Then he talks about doing his puppet show "White Like Me: A Honky Dory Puppet Show", in Los Angeles, Boston, and maybe Minneapolis. He then says "I hope to be in a theater near you, soon", in a parody of movie announcements. They then, both say thank you for the interview, and then good-bye.

On "The Five Count" website, they have a playlist of various guests promoting "The Five Count" show. Paul Zaloom's promo for the podcast is 18 seconds in length. And has him saying the following;

This week, Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain how mirrors work. Beakman begins by talking about light being similar to a pool {billiards} table, with a drawing of a pool table and the path of a ball as it bounces off the bumpers. There is then a quick fact about how smooth a mirror must be in order not to scatter the light that bounces off of it. Next there is a series of diagram illustrations showing how a wall, and a mirror reflect things differently, depending on their roughness. The third image shows the angle that the light arrives at the mirror is the same as the angle that the light moves away from the mirror. There is then a quick fact about two metals used in the making of mirrors' coatings. There is then a helpful suggestion to think of angles such as the one in a vehicles rearview mirror. {Objects in the MeatLoaf mirror may appear closer then they are. Sorry couldn't resist.} There is then a last illustration of two hand mirrors placed at 45 degree angles, and explanation that this is how periscopes work also. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the name "Narcissus".

This week Jax is silent, and gives the moral support, while Beakman gives the explanation.

In Jok's Facebook post for this comic, he gives a quick quote from Paul Zaloom as Narcissus {Mythological figure}, from Beakman's World, Season 1, episode 24 {S1E24}. Jok also reminisces about a scene from the "Jurassic Park" movie, involving a mirror.

That Narcissus guy really had a thing for himself. As Paul Zaloom said, playing him as a character on Beakman's World, "But enough about me. What do you love about me?" My favorite mirror joke in in the original film Jurassic Park. A rearview mirror had a caution: Objects in mirror view are closer than you can tell. The mirror also had a tyrannosaur rex chasing the car.

Just a quick reminder that Julie Christensen's birthday is on January 21. She appeared in Beakman's World, Season 1, episode 2 {S1E02}, as one of the two "Lawlettes of Motion", along side {Rita Valente, credited as "Rita Balente"}. I hope everyone will wish her a Happy Birthday, and try and listen to the new music she has been recording. Her new album, will be released the day after her birthday on January 22.' On the album is this song, as a 13th unlisted bonus track, but in that version she is with her band 'Stone Cupid.

I prefer this live version best of all, possibly because it was the first version I heard. Sadly the audio has clips, and record type skips. It is from the film "Leonard Cohen: I'm Your Man", and this version doesn't appear on the soundtrack. The film version doesn't have the audio errors that this video has. If you like this song, I recommend watching the entire film.

This is a live 'cover' performance by Julie Christensen, and Perla Batalla of the song "Anthem", originally recorded by Leonard Cohen. The original version was sung by him on his "The Future" 1992 album. This video is a segment from the film "Leonard Cohen: I'm Your Man". Julie starts the song, and Perla joins in shortly after, for the chorus then Perla takes over for a section, and then they finish as a duet. A alternate version of this song, sung by them, appears on the film's soundtrack. It was the 12th live song seen in the movie, and this video shows the entire film version of the song, including the red beaded curtain transition at the beginning, but it ends before they introduce the rest of the band. Julie also preformed another 'cover' version of this song as a 13th bonus track on her 2015/2016 album "The Cardinal" with her band 'Stone Cupid'. I prefer this live version best of all, possibly because it was the first version I heard. Sadly the audio has clips, and record type skips, possibly from the way it was uploaded, or deliberately inserted so that the viewer would watch the film version without the audio errors. This video was uploaded by Perla Batalla to her official YouTube channel on August 14, 2010, and is 5 minutes, and 56 seconds in length. In her video's text description, she says that the recording was made at the 'Sydney Opera House'.

The song is a anti-war song, and explains that peace is only a fleeting thing. Like a Dove {bird of peace} that is caught and then manages to get free, and then is caught again. It talks about the bells of churches that are rang for a funeral, and that those things should not be dwelled upon, {worried about}, and that neither should the future be worried about. Even in war, there will be a moment of light {hopefulness}. The song compares peace and war as the children and widows of governments, and how the people that run the wars are causing all the these deaths, and they act like they are not the cause of the wars. He then talks about how he is going to make a stand and will speak out about it. It ends by talking about how things are missing in that type of life, but that "Every heart, to love will come, but like a refugee." And then the chorus is repeated. Julie Christensen, and Perla Batalla also appeared on the original version of this song as background singers, on the 1992 album "The Future" by Leonard Cohen.

Julie Christensen's Birthday

January 21, 2016

Julie Christensen's Birthday is on January 21. She has performed music professionally since she was 19 years old, whether it was in the Country and Western style, Jazz, Rock, or Blues. She appeared in Beakman's World episode Season 1, Episode 02. She played one of the two Isaac Newton's

Lawlettes of Motion. She and Rita Balente {Valente}, sang the song "Inertia". Julie is mostly know as the co-singer in the post-punk band 'Divine Horsemen', and was backup singer for Leonard Cohen for a few years, but she has always loved, Jazz, and Blues, and other styles of music. In her 2008 album 'Where the Fireworks Are', she also has a song called "The Meteor", but that's a story for another time 😊

Her new album is scheduled to be released publicfor sale on the day after her birthday January 22. Hopefully her fans, both old and new will wish her a Happy Birthday, and let her know, what her music has meant to them.

Hopefully everyone wished Julie Christensen, a Happy Birthday yesterday. Today is the day her new album "The Cardinal" is released, by her band 'Stone Cupid'. If your still yearning for more Julie, this is a video in which Julie Christensen, and her husband actor John Diehl, make a brief appearance. The video was written and directed by their son Magnus Jackson Diehl.

It is a romantic story, of a boy who gives up on interacting with people. And then time stops. And he alone walks about, while everyone else is frozen, and he finds out how important it is to care for the people around him. How will he make up for treating his girlfriend so poorly.

Besides the link to the short film, their is also a link to his 'ideas' video, where he tells viewers about some of the story ideas that weren't used.

This is a video starring Magnus Jackson Diehl, {son of Julie Christensen, and John Diehl, both of whom also appear in the video}. It is a short silent {pantomime} film made on 16mm color film negatives, created for his film school, freshman year at SUNY Purchase {State University of New York at Purchase, also known as "Purchase State College"}. Originally the project was titled "Frozen in Time" in 2011, and he tried to raise funding for the film with a Indiegogo campaign. However it only raised $1,575 of the projected $2,000 needed to make the film back in February 20, 202. It was finally completed with the help of that money, and its name was later changed to "Stillframe" when it was released on his official Vimeo channel. The video is 11 minutes and 17 seconds in length.

He would later make a music video for Julie Christensen's song "Sideways Heart".

Stillframe, {Still Frame} by Magnus Diehl {Julie Christensen's son}

* <https://vimeo.com/72433755>

The film begins with Julie Christensen, seen only from about waist height. She brings her son breakfast in bed, consisting of, some juice, eggs and bacon in the shape of a smiley face. He basically ignores her, and she leaves without the viewer seeing her face. He is then seen leaving the house, but is stopped by a package on the front porch. As he enters the house again and goes up to his room, his dad {actor John Diehl} is seen reading a book called "Keeping Time".

The boy opens his package, it has his name Jacob Kahn, {the character's name}, but no sender's name. He then looks at the time, and puts the clock on the wall. At that moment it shows a girl sitting in a restaurant waiting for him. She then tries to call him but he sees that it is her and does not answer his cellular phone. Her name "Liz" can be seen on his phone, as he turns it over and pushes it away. Liz {played by Leah Friedman} gets tired of waiting, and leaves the restaurant.

His dad then goes to Jacob's bedroom door and knocks, but also doesn't get any answer, and finds the door locked. The boy then puts on his audio head phones and begins listening to music.

The music suddenly stops, and so does the clock. He then goes downstairs and finds that his dad is watching old home movies of himself and Jacob. The TV and his dad are both also not moving. He tries to wave his hand in front of his dad's face, but there is no reaction. He then finds that his mother is also not moving, and she was pouring milk at the time, which has also stopped moving in mid-stream.

He then goes to the restaurant where his girlfriend had been, but doesn't see her. He then goes to her home, and finds her also not moving, and she has taken of a necklace that he gave her. Next he returns home, and tries to eat while looking at his mom who is still not moving. He tries sitting near his dad and also gets no reaction. He then looks through old photographs of himself, family and friends. {There is even a image of Julie, with him in a backpack type seat on her back.} He then finds a image of him and his girlfriend, and he decided to go and visit her. He takes a table-cloth and preparers them a meal, but she still only looks past him as if he isn't there, and is still frozen in her motion. He walks around town, and it is seen later that he has placed his photographs on the wall around the clock. A wall that was empty before.

He then closes his eyes and remembers sitting on a shipping dock with his girlfriend, and nice times they had there. He is then seen giving her the necklace. After remembering this, he then gets upset with the clock, for not moving. He then punches the clock with his fist. Breaking the clock. He then runs over to his girlfriend's house, and puts the necklace back around her neck, and then kisses her. At that moment, the milk of his mother begins to flow again, his father watching television, and the home videos also start moving again. The last scene of the film shows his girlfriend smiling after she been kissed, {similar to the "Sleeping Beauty" story, and the camera zooms up towards a clock on her wall, {which is similar to the clock he received at the beginning of the film}}, the clock is now working. Jacob and Liz then smile at each other as the scene fades to black, and there is additional footage of them at the dock yards, while the credits are seen. Lastly there is a "Thank You" message for his classmates, and his teachers.

To record, and complete the film Magnus created a Indiegogo campaign that ran from December 2011, to February 2012. It featured a video about other things he had filmed, and how he planned to make this film. He shows clips from the various other home movies he made, and then there is footage of him talking about making this short film, showing story boards that he had and about how he hoped to make the film.

In this {presentation story pitch} video he says how he also video taped story ideas, and would go onto the movie sets that his father was acting on. He talks about wanting to make new stories and create movies. At about half-way through the video he {Magnus Jackson Diehl} talks to the camera in a webcam type way, about wanting to make this film, beside him is a Christmas tree. He explains it is a final examination submission for his freshman year in film school. He also talks about story elements that are not seen in the final film. Such as the boy is returning home, after being way. He would see people on the street, and the original time was 3PM instead of in the movie 11:20-11:21 AM. In the sketches she is seen at a apartment party, where alcohol is seen. He then mentions how there was also an idea, for his character to make a suicide attempt after finding that all the people are frozen, and that the character could die. In the YouTube video comments, he talks about if the character would, or would not, play pranks on the other characters while they were frozen. {Thankfully most of these ideas were not in the film, and it can be seen more of a light hearted love story.} Magnus then wishes everyone a Happy New Year, and suggests to the viewers, that helping fund this film, is what he wants for Christmas.

There is then a experiment in cooking sugar, Just like snow, the white sugar then melts and becomes clear. There is a warning for children to have permission and help of a parent before trying to do this experiment. There is also a fast fact about the temperature that some sugars melt. There is then a comparison of the sugar, and snow, and how their surfaces are like tiny mirrors. It then describes how when both melt they become clear. Lastly there is a suggestion to add lemon, or orange flavoring to the sugar, to create lollipops. There are illustrations of various types of snow flakes, and different colors, and sizes of lollipops. There is also a suggestion to research the words "snow world record".

If you haven't had a chance to listen to her new album, here are a few links to listen to samples of it, and to a review that I made, detailing the production, release, and story themes, of the album. Hopefully her new album will sell well, and Julie can make many more Rock and Roll/Southern Blues Rock type albums, and someday tour around the world, while performing her own material. Wishing her all the best, on this, and all her future projects.

{See image description for links to samples, and review.}

The CD is currently available only through her stonecupid official music store, but the digital versions of the album are on Amazon, and iTunes, and hopefully more sites to be announced. And if your wondering, we had to pay for the album just like everyone else. It is a good album, and we hope you will give it a listen.

This is a series of photographs of the new Julie Christensen/Stone Cupid album, which was officially released on January 22, 2016 the day after her birthday. Hopefully everyone remembers her from Beakman's World, Season 1, Episode 02 {S1E02}, where she played one, of the two "Lawlettes of Motion". Her usual solo albums are in the Blues/Jazz/Country and Western styles, with the occasional rock and roll track. Although she was in a the punk rock band "Divine Horsemen" from 1984 until about 1988. If you were lucky you got to hear about it early and help her fund the promotion and release of the album through "Pledge Music". The album was made available early, to all the 'Pledge Music' members, with a early pre-release on August 05, 2015. It was also a place to by autographed CD's and other things like her limited edition book called "Stone Cupid: A Book of Words", a collection of her reminiscences, poems and lyrics. {But that is a subject for a later post.} This is a "Pledge Music" autographed album, here we circled the pledge backer's/recipient's name "Teary Eyes" Anderson, this is also to whom the inscription is made out to. If a person spent $150, or more in her Pledge Music shop, getting their name on the CD jacket was a option.

Below is a shorter version of my full review of the album. The long version of the review can be found on 'Amazon' here;

Stone Cupid - The Cardinal, review.

* <http://www.amazon.com/gp/customer-reviews/R1SV5BI0IKXFHT>

The first song "The Cardinal" is a slow blues ballad written by Julie. It is about her love for a high school football {rugby} player, {that played for the "Newton Cardinals", in Newton, Iowa}. She sees a Cardinal bird in a tree and is reminded of the football player. {She seems to mention this guy again in her book "Stone Cupid: A Book of Words", in a section called "Park".}

"Shed my Skin" the next song has a central, repeating guitar riff. The song is about someone feeling edgy and trying to get away, {breakaway from their current environment, "Shed my Skin"} and go some place new. This song is a 'cover version' of the song originally performed by Dan Navarro. However the original version was more melancholy and Country-Pop, type style. While this version by Julie seems to fit the rough lyrics of the song better. {Lyrics like, "Come on and take a ride, Across the border", also have a significance to Julie as she appeared in a film called "Boarder Radio", about a guy going over the boarder from the USA to Mexico, it starred her then husband Chris Desjardins, she played only a small part, as a ticket girl, at a night club.}

The third song "Riverside", is about a women who buys a used car, and enters it into a demolition Derby in Riverside, Iowa. The song then talks about her girlfriend, and difficulties in the relationship. This song was written by Julie, and Laura Curtis.

Following on from the previous song, this next song "Broken Wing" was also written by Julie, and Laura Curtis. It is about a women that remembers an old lover, and the fun, and sorrows they had.

The fifth song, "Girl in the Sky", is about a girl that walks a tight rope {lives on the edge of danger}. It was written by Amelia White. Every time I hear this I think of the new "Supergirl" television series. It talks about a girl's love for danger, in the lyrics, "you asked for the danger, you had to try". Then later it tells about how her family, and others view her life. "Everybody thinks your life is so exciting, they'd love to taste the altitudes they've never known." There is even a lyric that matches the Supergirl story, about learning to fly by leaping and then, giving it all up. "How you came to that leap of flight, and passed them by". During each chorus she talks about being a lonely girl, and that she is only a dreamer. This song has a quite, 'Country and Western' feel to it. As if the singer is out in a field, watching a circus acrobat walk a rope between two tents.

"Saint on a Chain" is a pulse pounding, track that starts off fairly slow, and steadily builds up until just before the end, where it quickly returns to the rhythm from the beginning of the song. It was written by Kevin Gordon. It is about a women that has lived in the same town all of her life. She then talks about her life, and how before her mother died, the woman was given her a silver necklace of Saint Christopher. To look the daughter when her mother is gone. The woman then compares her life's blood, to that of the rain, and the muddy river. She then talks about breaking up with her girlfriend Heather, after being drunk, and cheating on Heather. The structure of the song is similar to the song "Bat Out of Hell" by Meat Loaf, in how the songs speed up, and become more guitar driven. The stories also have a similar ending going too fast with a vehicle.

The next track, "No Mercy", was written by Julie, David Olney, and John Hadley. It begins by making comparisons of how the world works, and it is ran in a this is right and this is wrong manner. The guitars, and drums play a equal part, with Julie's voice. Making the hard edged lyrics seem like a angry protest song, with a a hint of resignation, at the events that occurred within the song. Julie in a post dated July 13, 2015, for her "Pledge Music" fund raising campaign for the album's release, said that this song "feels kind of like the stuff we used to do with Divine Horsemen."

The 8-track {sorry, I couldn't resist}, "Gasoline" was written by Julie Christensen. Of all the songs on the album, this song reminds me the most of the Blues/Rock that George Thorogood became famous for performing. The song also reminds me of the television series "Blood & Oil". It talks about a person that works at a oil pumping station. It at first take a retrospective look at the subject of oil, at a time when "Golden girls with oily curls, Manly men and all their friends", would use oil in their vehicles. {There is a reference to the myth about oil being from dinosaurs, in the fact that some oil is from fossil plants oils. While the most famous fossils are of dinosaurs, the company "Sinclair Oil Corporation" began using dinosaurs for their mascots. Most non-crude oils are made from living, or recently living plants, or animals.} The song then describes how the oil is gotten out of the ground, and how the oil "stinks like a latrine".

The next track "100 Floors", was also written by Julie. It is played as if she is the wife, or mother of a U.S. Civil War casualty. It talks about her pain, after hearing the news. She then talks about how she tries to handle the pain, by doing "little chores", and house hold things, but she still feels like she is falling "Down a hundred floors, in an elevator with no doors". She then talks about being alone and that they are not coming home. Next she compares their death to "a flower being crushed, a drying blossom turned to dust". It then tells how people try to console her about the death, but it does not help. She ends the song by repeating "You are never coming home".

The 10th track, is a 'cover song' called "Would You Love Me?" originally written, and preformed by Charles Prophet. The song is about a women trying to makeup with her lover. The original version of the song is more of a slow Rock N Roll ballad, while Julie's version is more of a quicker Blues/Jazz version.

Moving on from the Blues/Jazz song, this next song, "Broken as I Am", written by Julie, drops the other shoe, and focuses on the Jazz elements, with wind instruments, and drums taking center stage with Julie's vocals. I like to think of this as a continuation of the "Saint on a Chain" story, with a vehicle accident that she is able to walk away from, but rather hurt and broken in several places, on her way home.

The final, main song on the album "Live and Not Die Trying", is also written by Julie. The song is about a singer that is trying to make a living at performing concerts. She talks about dreaming of being rich, but her aim at those dreams was never very good. She talks about how the dream "just kept slipping through" her grasp.

As a bonus track, there is a thirteenth bonus track. "Anthem", written and originally preformed by Leonard Cohen. This is a 'cover song', tribute to her previous recordings with Leonard Cohen. It is not shown on the CD track listings. The original Leonard Cohen version was released on his 1992 album "The Future". Julie originally appeared as a back up vocalist on the song. {That same year she also appeared on television, in the science children's show "Beakman's World". She then continued touring, and appearing on other shows with Leonard Cohen, and his other backing vocalist Perla Batalla.} Julie's version of this song is a sober Blues/Rock N Roll style ballad, with guitar, and drums. While the Leonard Cohen version had more synthesizer and

Pop/Jazz style, with choir type backing vocals. {I prefer a earlier version Julie made of this song for the film "Leonard Cohen: I'm Your Man", where she, and Perla Batalla preformed the song as a duet, with a band, and symphony as backing instruments. The film version was also posted on Perla Batalla's official YouTuibe channel, but did not appear in the soundtrack, instead a different performance of the song was used.}

The album is dedicated to "Holger Augustus Christensen", Julie's father who died in July 11, 2014. The spine of the album lists the band as "Stone Cupid featuring Julie Christensen", {similar to the way "Martha Davis and The Motels" are some times featured}. It also lists this as album SC003, being her third self published album by "Stone Cupid Music". The earlier two albums being, "Love is Driving", and "Soul Driver". While her other albums were released through the "Household Ink" label.

The CD version of this album, as of January 2016, so far is, or was, only available at two places, first as a "Pledge Music", backer early release. To help raise money to promote and release the album. And at the official Stone Cupid webpage store hosted by the website "theconnexion".

* Besides the CD her "Pledge Music" store, had a digital version of the album, which had multiple digital PDF lyrics for each song. And two additional PDF images, the first with of both front and back covers, and the second image of the interior album information. They also offered printed lyric sheets from various Julie songs, autographed CD's, shirts with the "Cardinal" cover illustration, Julie's first book called "Stone Cupid: A Book of Words", and even perfume called "Stone Cupid", along with other exclusive backer based rewards. Part of the proceeds, 3% over the goal of "Pledge Music" goal, were also donated to the charity "Thistle Farms". The pledge drive resulted in reaching 103% of it's goal. The pledge drive lasted from May 13 to August 4, of 2015. The album was released for digital download on August 05, 2015, and the CD's were presumably released, and or shipped that day, and the following days.

For longer term Julie Christensen fans, this album brings Julie back to her earlier Rock N Roll roots. Her previous album "Weeds Like Us", hinted at this Rock direction, but it was more of a country and western feel to it. For fans of her work with the 'Divine Horsemen', this will be a album they can immediately see what it would have been like if Julie had been the only vocalist in the band. Although not quite as punk rock as her work with that band, the Hard Rock/Blues style of this album, makes a great platform for her lyrics, and the lyrics of the songs she 'covers'. Even if the fans are more interested in her Jazz, or Country and Western styles, those styles were also incorporated into the album. The Rock N Roll, styles of bands like Lynyrd Skynyrd, and George Thorogood, along with other Southern, and Blues Rock bands can be heard. She gives strong female vocals in the tradition of lead female bands like "Heart", Bonnie Tyler, Pat Benatar, the underlaying Jazz formula, similar to that of Martha Davis from 'The Motels', and powerful ballads such as Joan Jett can belt out. Some songs seem to be written for a guy, but instead of changing them for a women singer, it is nice to see that the women, can fall in love with another women in the songs. Which hopefully is a result of performers such as Melissa Etheridge, K.D. Lang, and even the girl duo of t.A.T.u. helping to make such songs more acceptable to a wider audience. The things that I would have changed are that the songs seem out of order, in that, they seem to tell a single story, with a few different turns here and there. They could have been placed in one story arch. The other I wanted to mention is the promise of the lyrics being available on her website, which are still missing, but it has only been a few days since the album was released. I always feel sad when artists don't release the lyrics to their songs, and you have to guess, but thankfully I was one of the early listeners, and got the PDF lyrics from the "Pledge Music" version. I hope everyone else will get a chance to see these lyrics, and that maybe Julie will post all of her song lyrics for every album on her website someday.

Like bookends for the week, here is the second part/Update for the earlier review of the Julie Christensen/Stone Cupid album "The Cardinal". One thing not mentioned earlier, is that the lyrics in 'Broken Wing', "When we watched each other fall, it felt like flying", could also be a reference to sky diving. {A activity that can cause many injuries, or even the death of someone, if done poorly.}

This time we focus on the 'other', version of the album, a CDR version manufactured by Amazon KYDC. This version is pretty generic, and is mostly for people who want a physical copy of the album, but aren't interested in the original release information. The files are in standard audio CD format, for CD audio player, and not on MP3, although the MP3 files seem to have been converted to make this CD version. If your looking for a CD version of the album, I suggest buying the original version from the stonecupid, theconnexion websites, if you buy the CDR version, remember that you are getting a converted, generic version of the album.

This is a image of the official Amazon CDR version of the Julie Christensen/Stone Cupid album "The Cardinal". The CDR version was manufactured using the MP3 files by Amazon KYDC {Kentucky Distribution Center}, it features the audio files burned to a CD, and has a black boarder around the front cover of the album's artwork. The CD and packaging are pretty generic. It is basically for people who need a CD version of the album, to play on a standard CD Player, but can't get (or find), the original CD release. The back cover does not have a track listing, but instead only features the title, band's name, the original publisher of the material, a notification that it is a CDR, and barcode with the Amazon KYDC statement. The inner side of the front insert, has the track list, and time length of each track in two places. Once on the inner side of the front cover. And the second, and on the back of the insert, with a CDR notice, and the barcode, but without the numbers, or KYDC info. The inner side of the back of the insert is black/grey, and blank. The CDR has the same black/grey background, with the album name, band, CDR notice, and original publisher name. There are no album information about the people involved in the making of the album, no photographs, or link to the stonecupid website where the lyrics, are now available. The original CD version of the album, with artwork and release info credits, can be purchased at the official Stone Cupid webpage store, hosted by the website "theconnexion".

This is a collection of images, of the albums that the Cast and crew of Beakman's World created before, during and after the show. It represents the many forms of music that combined to give Beakman's World its rhythm. From, Punk rock, to Blues, Jazz, and Country, many forms of music were involved in the lives of the people who contributed to Beakman's World. Hopefully this image collection/catalog of the works for these artists, will inspire Beakman Fans to listen to music that they might otherwise not have listen to.

There is a rich, and diverse group of talent that went into making Beakman's World the way that it was. One of the biggest influences was music, from the guests, to the songs in the show, to the way it was filmed like a music video. This collection of images, gives you a look at what the actors, singers, and artists did before, and after the show was over. This the first look at some of the music that these people made throughout the years. Here we look at 50 albums, featuring a wide range of talented people, that helped make Beakman's World what it is.

This is a index card, for the index cards. "Beakman's World, the Legacy of its Music." It features the first 50 Beakman related musical albums that we found, with a image of the front and back of each album, to show the cover artwork, and tracks listed on the album. Since I hope to start a new folder for the next 50, now seemed a good time to index the full set of reference images. {Mark Mothersbaugh did a similar thing on his "Musik For Insomniaks" cassette tapes, with a sample listing of each track at the end of the album. Mark was the person that composed the "Beakman's World" theme song}. Hopefully plenty more albums will be found, and we will have a chance to do a summary/review for each of them. I hope everyone is looking forward to seeing, and, or listening, to the next 50 albums as much as I am. See you on the flipside.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain how potholes in the roads are created. Explaining how most roads are made of asphalt and that it has little spaces that water can get into. There is then a explanation about what people can do to get them repaired, by contacting their local government officials, but they are reminded to not get angry about the holes in the road. Next there is a description of how asphalt is made, and how the substance moves, and is broken up, by water, and ice. A experiment is then described, a water bottle frozen, without its cap. Lastly there is a suggestion to research "crocodile cracking". There are three illustrations of the process of a pothole being formed, and two illustrations of various road signs. Jax gives the explanations this week, while Beakman gives the moral support.

Potholes. Oy! Before we run off to city hall to complain or demand, it seems like a good idea to know what we're complaining about or what we're demanding to be done. Potholes, it turns out, happen. Like 'other' things happen. It usually doesn't have anything to do with road maintenance budgets and schedules. It has more to do with the timing of things like rain, seepage, and hot and cold — even here in San Francisco, where the streets are almost always dug up. If complaining and/or demanding about anything, it always helps to sprinkle in a few buzz-terms. For potholes they include crocodile or alligator cracking.

If you think back to the Liza days of Beakman's World, you'll remember several songs that she was a part of, such as a song about "Oil" Season 2, Episode 09 {S2E09}, "Snakes" {S2E25}, and "Kidneys" {S3E10}. She was also in several bands. The bands "It's My Party!" and "Honey Pig" both had albums featuring her as a singer. Eliza eventually recorded a solo album, and started a new band "Eliza Jane & the Barnyard Gypsies. This is a example of their music, and the first music video she did with them.

This is a series of screenshots from the music video "SOS", by Eliza Jane & the Barnyard Gypsies, from 2007. The song is from her album "Eliza Jane: Gypsy Grass". It is about the 2000-2004 elections of George Walker Bush to the position of President of the United States, Which was reported to have had allegations of voting fraud, miscounting of votes, and rigging of voting machines. Mixed in with the music video are scenes from the film "Electile Dysfunction". Eliza returned to politics in her music, about a year later, with a song called "Palin! Fire! Fire! Fire!", which was written by Eliza, and Eric Schwartz. "SOS" was written by Eliza, and the video was filmed at a farm house. The video was posted to her official YouTube channel on August 22, 2008. It is 4 minutes and 47 seconds in length.

SOS by Eliza Jane

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GUalzgPX0EQ>

The video begins with a greeting sign outside on the porch of a house. Sitting on a table, the sign says "Cowboy's Logic: Be sure to taste your words before you spit them out." next it sows various footage of Eliza playing violin, watering plants, putting water in a hat, and placing it on the head of one of the members of the band. The band is playing on the front porch. Then the scene shifts several times from Eliza playing with them, to her standing by a barn type door, and another scene where she is singing and playing near a cactus, and finally sitting on a farming tractor.

The song begins with a violin solo by Eliza, then she begins to sing about George Walker Bush calling him "a skunk", and later "a manipulator, and a deficit creator". She explains that "We've been taken over by thugs. It's us against big money {corporate, and wealthy people}, and they're sweeping us under the rug." She then talks about the election of the year 2000, and how she was hoping for Albert "Al" Gore to become president, because she felt Bush would want to start another war. Eliza then talks about how the votes were miscounted, and because of that bush was elected, and "they began their terrorist reign". She then explains that the song is a SOS {the Morse code signal for distress}, like "a message in a bottle, from the American people to you" {the listener}. There is then a musical instrumental, and afterward she talks about the 2004 election. She talks about protesting, and taking it to the streets, that voting machines were "took {away} the machines from Democrats and greens {new voters}, so we couldn't vote when we got there." She then repeats the lyrics about a message in a bottle, and about the thug, and big money. The music then ends, and the last 47 seconds of the video are footage of Clint Curtis' testimony about rigging election voting machines, and the credits of the music video/video footage.

Following on the heels of her successful song "SOS", Eliza teamed up with Eric Schwartz, to once again tackle a political issue. But this time in a more humorous way. This time it is a silly musical auto-biography of a political candidate. With Eliza playing the lead role, not only do you get to see her act silly, you also get to see her in a swimsuit, and firing weapons. Sounds almost like a videogame doesn't it? 😊 Maybe her next project should be a "Tomb Raider" movie, with Eliza playing Lara Croft. Or maybe as a DEO {Department of Extra-Normal Operations} agent in the new Supergirl television series. 😊

This is a series of screenshots from the music video "PALIN! - Fire! Fire! Fire!", a song written by Eliza Jane and Eric Schwartz in 2008. The song was released after her album "Eliza Jane: Gypsy Grass", and so far, as of yet, it doesn't appear on the album.

It is about the 2008 election, and is a parody of the life and political career of Sarah Palin. Unlike her previous music video, about George Walker Bush, this video is presented more as a satire, focused on Palin giving a power point presentation, about why she should be elected Vice-President, along with John McCain as President of the United States. The video was posted to her official YouTube channel on October 22, 2008, and also on her co-writes YouTube channel, on November 4, 2008. It is 4 minutes and 31 seconds in length.

Eliza Jane Schneider - PALIN! - Fire! Fire! Fire! - Cowritten by Eric Schwartz

The video begins with Eliza dressed in a Eskimo/inuit type of fur coat. As music is played on a piano, she sings, as if in a high school musical. As Sarah Palin, Eliza talks about life in Alaska, and the hardships she had to endure, and animals she helped to kill. She then takes off the fur coat, revealing a pink business suit. Next she talks about becoming interested in the differences between people and animals. {There is then a image comparison of George Bush, and a chimpanzee.} Her conclusion is that the differences between them are "Fire, Fire, Fire. Like the fire and brimstone, that will rain from the heavens up above". {There is then movie footage of people being killed by meteorites.} She talks about the firing {shooting} of weapons, and how they were used to take the land from its native inhabitants. She then talks about "Firing up" {getting people excited, or angry, about something} the PTA {Parent Teacher Association}, AIP {Alaskan Independence Party}, and the NRA {National Rifle Association}. She then talks about trying to "fire" {remove a person from their work} a librarian because of the books she had, and a commissioner because "I didn't like his looks". She then lists some animals she shoot, and then jokingly points the gun at the camera, and says that she will "fire" {shoot} at the viewer too, and then tells how she is just kidding. She then talks about ideas she is for, but then remembers about changing her ideas about what was acceptable, when, "it became a politically liability". She then talks about not believing in protected sex. And that "together we will create a nation of unwed teen {teenage} mothers." She says this while stripping off the business suit to reveal a two piece U.S. flag bakini. Then she explains how she always gets what she wants, and the one time she did lose, was at a beauty contest. She is then seen wearing the contest crown, the banner "Miss Congeniality" over one shoulder, and on the other a ammo filled bandolier. She explains, that after the contest, the winner's pet had a accident. She then asks people to vote for her in the coming election, and John McCain, but she then warns a picture of him, that a accident could happen to him also. She then talks how we {her and the United States} could attack people, and countries that she doesn't like, until "the Earth is all one great big ball of Fire, Fire, Fire." There is old footage of a nuclear bomb exploding. The video then fades, and as if afterward, she massages a gun and says, "President Palin. Oh, I like that." And then blows a kiss at the viewer. The screen then fades to black again, and Eliza's song "SOS" is heard during the credits. The last thing seen in the video is a message that says "Vote".

Hi everyone, I just wanted to tell you that I accidentally deleted two folders of image posts. Once that happened Facebook deleted all the posts from when I shared images from those folders. If you remember seeing a post, and it is now gone, it is because the image was from those folders. I still have all the images, and will hopefully re-post them in the next few days. Sadly I can not reverse time date them, so they won't be in chronological order. But I will try and post the "Original post date:" in the new re-posts.

Sorry, I will try to get them back into new folders soon. Hopefully everyone has got a chance to look through some of the great images in the other folders. Have a great weekend.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok answer questions about the cartoon character SpongeBob SquarePants. They explain that its creator Stephen Hillenberg based the character on a "living sea sponge", but is made to look like the {foam type} kitchen sponge. There is a explanation about the place the characters live, and that the character Plankton, is based on creatures called plankton. There is then facts about these plankton, and that they make "most of the oxygen we breath". There is then a recommendation, description of a television show called "Nova", which shows photographs of plankton. Lastly there is a suggestion to Google search the words "PBS satellites plankton nova". There are illustrations of Stephen, the character Plankton, compared what it would really look like, and a background image of microscopic plankton. This week Jax gives the explanations, while Beakman gives the moral support.

It's everywhere you look, the real thing: Cognitive Knowledge. Even looking into frivolity, such as a certain sponge, results in something one might really want to know about. Who-da-thought?

Although we don't usually make new 'interview' post on Sundays, {this day is for Jok's "You Can with Beakman and Jax" comic}, today we wanted to do something special. It is Valentine's Day, and so here is a video with Mark Mothersbaugh, {the man who wrote the Beakman's World theme}. The video gives a message of love, a few beauty tips, and is done with a sense of humor.

This is a humorous video created by a photo journalist Mister Bonzai {Mr. Bonzai}, and Mark Mothersbaugh {composer of the Beakman's World theme song}. The video was filmed at Mutato Muzika, a company that Mark created in 1989. It has Mark playing a song, about love, and he share a few beauty tips with the viewer. The video was uploaded to MisterBonzai's official YouTube channel, on June 30, 2011, and is 2 minutes and 38 seconds in length.

Mark O'Devo: Beauty Secret (with Mr. Bonzai)

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=I0A6BvbzPb0>

The video begins with Mark playing the harpsichord, and a nifty title screen that says; "Mark O'DEVO: Beauty Secret, with Mr. Bonzai" {"Mark of DEVO", DEVO is the name of his band, meaning "DE-(reverse)-eVOLution"}. It then shows a bit of the music studio, while Mark is playing. He then is interrupted, by the host Mr. Bonzai, that asks Mark about how he says so young looking. After Mark says he'd "Love to" explain, the video then cuts to him opening a package of facial cream mask, and putting it on his face. The illustration on the packaging seems suspiciously like the drawings of Mark Mothersbaugh, a beautiful woman, and in the background, a zombie type person, with a the facial mask covering its face, reaching out towards the woman. While putting on the mask, Mark then warns the viewers about getting the gel into their eyes. The host then thanks him for the interview, and Mark then returns to playing the instrument. Saying "I'm working on a little thing." He then begins singing along with his playing at about 2:00. "Let there be love amid the bullets, and the tears, the pain, and the suffering. Just remember let there be love." He ends the song with a comical thumping of the keyboard, with his elbow.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain about the holiday Valentine's Day, and hearts. First explanation tells that very little is known about saint Valentine, and that it was a day of feasting. Then in 1969 the Roman Catholic Church decided it would not set aside a 'special day' for the holiday. There is then a fast fact about that the day in modern times is usually thought of involving greeting cards. Next there is a suggestion about winning someone's heart {love}, by washing the dishes, then using the empty soap bottle to do a experiment. There are two illustrations of the water bottle, showing where to cut a hole in its side, and how to use it like a two-way valve to pump water. This is compared to a illustration of a heart, and there is a explanation that the heart has two of these type of pumps, and how quickly they both usually pump. And that this is something to love. The comic's background image is a series of pink, light flares, stars, and heart shapes. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the "atrium ventricle", of the heart.

Beakman gives the explanation this week, while Jax gives the moral support.

Saints do have a way of disappearing now and then. Bobble-heads on dashboards used to be larger numbers of stick-on or suction-cup Saint Christophers — who “protected” travelers. He was also the theme of many, many necklaces. And while those statues and lockets are pretty much gone, Valentines are still around. I think what could be, and could not be sold by Hallmark had something to do with that.

Besides being known for his music, Mark Mothersbaugh is also a famous artist. Here is a appearance he did on the children's television show "Yo Gabba Gabba!" Here he teaches children to draw different things. Each time he appears in these "Mark's Magic Picture" segments he has a different type of moustache, glasses, hat, and other such things.

{See image description for link}

In this video he also seems to parody the 1914 film Gertie The Dinosaur, by Winsor McCay. As a extra bonus I also added links to where you can watch the two Gertie videos.

February 19, 2016

This is a series of images from a segment of the television show called "Yo Gabba Gabba!". Mark Mothersbaugh, {the guy that wrote the Beakman's World theme song} teaches children how to draw, and tells the viewer, some information about what the thing they are drawing is. Although Mark doesn't appear in every segment of the show, he does occasionally do these, 'how to draw' videos, during the show's episodes. The television series is about toy monsters that come to life by saying the title words of the show. The show is about their adventures, and the people they meet. Their best friend is DJ Lance Rock. The show has books being read, music videos, and other creative things for children to do. Mark Mothersbaugh even appeared in a episode with his band DEVO. This video was uploaded to their official YouTube channel on March 2, 2015, and is 1 minute and, 15 seconds.

Mark greets the viewer, and then tells them that he is going to teach them to draw a Tyrannosaurus Rex {T. Rex} dinosaur. He then talks about its "small head, and tiny little arms". While he is drawing he leaves the teeth until last, and then, after drawing the teeth, the dinosaur comes to life. He then takes out food from his pocket and throws it up in the air, and the T.Rex jumps off the page to get it. {This segment where a person feeds a dinosaur on the screen, seems to be a parody of the 1914 film "Gertie the Dinosaur", by Winsor McCay. She later appeared in "Gertie on Tour" from 1921, see link at the bottom, for links to both films.} Mark then says good-bye. The last 6 seconds of the video have the Yo Gabba Gabba logo, and icons from places that they have official webpages at. It also asks the viewer to subscribe to their channel. Their YouTube channel also has the occasional behind the scenes videos, as well as other special videos not found on their show, or on the DVDs. So far there are 14 USA DVD's of their show.

JR Church Unusual co=incidence. Gertie the dinosaur is a part of an upcoming Beakman comic strip and Mark and I are old town lie-lang, both from Akron, Ohio. When I heard they used masking tape to mount different stacked "fx boxes" into their electric guitars, I fell in Love with Devo.

Tyler Anderson Hopefully you will also like the new story that I wrote. We are translating it into Portuguese, and hopefully in a day or two, the second half of the Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum/Beakman's World story will get posted here in "Beakman Fans", and on our "Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum, Entusiastas" Facebook page. In this story Jose {Alanna Ubach} becomes Lester's hero. 😊 That and the title "Friends & Family", are the only hints about the story until it is released.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain the black color of tires. A subject that was also covered in Beakman's World, Season 4, Episode 07 {S4E07}. They explain that the black color is from carbon, mixed with the rubber, and that makes the tire stronger. There are then facts about rubber, such as its origin, the person that named it. Next it is explained that rubber and spaghetti, have similar "stringy" molecules. It then talks about the person that discovered that heating it, and adding substances to rubber made it harder. Lastly the effect of carbon on rubber is described. There is a illustration of tire tread marks, a pencil erasing words. There is also a suggestion to research the word "Polymer".

This week Beakman gives the explanation while Jax remains silent, and gives the moral support.

Tires have to be black cause carbon is such a friendly atom it gets stuck in the goshy net that latex molecules form -- a lot like spaghetti and meat balls.

This is a image "Teary Eyes" Anderson originally created for his friend, and co-host's birthday. He also wrote this story as a birthday present for her. She also translated the story into Portuguese. After a few corrections here and there, they are now able to present this second half of the story to the fans of both shows. Please remember that he does not speak, or understand Portuguese, and she does not know English. The English version posted on "Beakman Fan", and the Portuguese version posted on "Castelo Rá-Tim-Bum, Entusiastas".

Hopefully this will bring the two worlds together seamlessly, and we hope there will not be any complaints about errors in the English, or Portuguese versions of the story. If you like these stories please consider spending some time learning more about the people, that helped to create these two great shows. Then share your support of their new projects, which they currently working on.

Castelo Rá-Tim-Bum: Friends & Family {Episode 92}

By Tyler "Teary Eyes" Anderson

Translated by Ju {Juliane} Zaloom

This is the second story featuring the Beakman's World cast visiting Castelo Rá-Tim-Bum, and its host of imaginative character. We suggest you read the first story before reading this continuation.

First half of the story.

Castelo Rá-Tim-Bum: Reunions {Episode 91}

* <https://www.facebook.com/BeakmanFans/photos/562585100586479>

 Story, and main characters.

The castelo is in the town of São Paulo, the capital of Brazil. It was created by a magic tree, and possible by the fairies that live on a ornament in the tree. Three people, and several curious creatures live in it. Nino is usually visited every day by three local children that also play in the castelo, along with Nino. The castelo is named after a India raja with the last name Timbum. It is now more then 20 years since they first visited the castelo. The characters have returned, and invited some of their friends, and family.

Nino, young boy only a few hundred years old, looks like a guy in his 30's with a reverse bowl hairdo, with cow lick tail in back, with curl at its end. His parents own the castelo, but always travel, and are never seen, he is left with his uncle and aunt.

Dr. Vito, is Nino's uncle, and is a doctor, but also a wizard. He usually leaves at the beginning of the episode, and returns at the end.

Morgana, a sorceress, lives in the tower, with her crow Adelaide. She has long 'Bride of Frankenstein'/Beakman style hair.

 Three main children that usually arrive every day.

Pedro, boy with a top hat, and a robot/skull shirt.

Biba, girl in a striped dress, and has a bow in her hair.

Zeca {Zequinha}, youngest, wearing baseball hat with front tipped upward, wears overall.

 Other characters:

Mau, a hairy, grumpy, puppet monster, {his name means 'Bad'}. his only friend is Godofredo. He is similar to the character of Oscar the Grouch on Sesame Street, but he has a kind heart underneath.

Godofredo, goblin like, puppet creature that is always scared, and shaking. {His name also sounds similar to the English word "afraid".

Porteiro, the robot door man/guard. A puppet on a stick only his head and neck are ever seen.

Relógio, a talking clock, {name means "clock"}.

Adelaide, Morgan's pet crow, hand puppet.

Ratinho, claymation rat, that drives rat mobile. Remote controlled car that occasionally drives through the castle and then drives into the hole in the wall, signifying the start of the claymation scene with Ratinho doing activities like brushing his teeth.

Bongo, the pizza delivery man, a Jamaican.

Etevaldo, a space alien with long tubes on the side of his head, and markers for finger tips. he wears a body suit with half sphere's glued to it, and around his waist are hula hoop rings.

Et-Cetera: Sister of Etevaldo, from the same planet, dressed in a similar costume.

Caipora, a cat-person played by an actress. She is a folk myth type, sprite creature, that appears when anyone whistles. Covered in red fur, and has raccoon type black stripe across her eyes, and her skin is red.

Penelope, television news reporter, she is always dressed in pink and has pink hair.

{Fade in from black, then the camera zooms in towards the castelo. Next the camera moves upward along the tower, to a window, and then goes inside.}

Adelaide: Morgannnaaa, What are you making this time?

Morgana: I am helping with the cooking. I am making tomato soup for the party.

Adelaide did you know that the tomato is native to Central and South America?

Adelaide: No I did not, do you mean that no Europe or Asia country had it for many years?

{Morgana uses her magic powers to keep it stirring while she goes to her bookcase and opens a book about tomatoes.}

Morgana: Yes they were small fruit at first and have later grown into sizes as big, or bigger then apples. In the country where our guests are from, they even consider it a vegetable and not a fruit. Here are some of the earliest drawings of tomatoes, look at how different they look.

{The book near the cauldron begins closing its pages and the face on the book begins to talk.}

Livro Falante: Remember to add the seasoning to the soup. It is one of the most important ingredients of any soup.

Morgana: Yes that is true, and like the coco, and buttered toast that the children are making. Our guests will probably want grilled cheese sandwiches to dip into their soup, along with salted crackers. That is the traditional side meals that go along with these meals in the United States.

Adelaide: So many different customs, and ways of doing things that are new friends have. I wonder what new things we will be able to learn from them.

{Morgana, puts the book away and returns to the soup, and begins stirring it again.}

Morgana: There is no telling what other new things they will teach us, that is the importance of meeting new people from new places. To learn and share knowledge.

We will just have to wait and see what happens.

{As she says this, she looks at the camera, stands there a while, and blinks. She then she gets tired of waiting, and repeats herself.}

Morgana: ...Wait and see what happens...

{Then she raises one eyebrow, and winks. There is a magical white flash from her eye, and the scene then fades to black.}

{The main opening credits begin. Then, the children are seen drawing with chalk on the floor, several pieces of paper have been taped together on their back sides, and the children are drawing on the front. They are drawing fish, and underwater plants.}

Biba: Look here, if you stand at this point it looks like you are looking through the floor and into the ocean. Come everyone and look.

Pedro: Yes it is quite interesting that from this angle the entire drawing looks as if you can fall right into it.

Zeca: But if you stand off to this side, or look at it from another direction it looks flat. I wonder why that is?

Beakman: That is because of perspective, when lines are seen from a certain angle, they seem to go off into the distance. In fact I have a demonstration here. Look at these two tables, they look like they are different sizes, but now watch this. I will place this table cloth over both, and you will see that they are the same size.

Maca: Wow that is interesting, can I have the image of the tables, and the cloth. I would like to show my friends at school?

Beakman: You can have it, and also this book about optical illusions.

{The other two children stand up, and begin looking at the book. Then Baba turns, and looks at the drawings that they had just made.}

Baba: That is very interesting, we were simply drawing, and we created a optical illusion of looking into the ocean.

Sancho-Esteban: From up here, it looks like I could dive into the image, and go swimming.

{From a hole in the wall Porteiro, appears.}

Porteiro: Sorry to interrupt, however we have some new guest arriving.

Admiral Costa: Hello again, my friend Dr. Vito. And how are you Nino, have you recovered from your motion sickness?

Dr. Vito: Welcome my friend, we have just finished eating. But we can create a meal for you if you like.

Morgana: Admiral it is a honor to have you in our home once again, please let me make something for you.

Admiral Costa: That is not unnecessary. I did not want to miss the big moment, and I wanted to bring along a few friends. You haven't washed your dishes yet, have you?

Dr. Vito: No the dishes are still in the sink ready to be cleaned, but you can help yourself to anything that you want.

Admiral Costa: I wish to bring in my Aquarium, and my friends could use some food crumbs. Nino can you help me bring it in?

Nino: Sure, I'd be happy to help you.

{The Admiral and Nino then go outside for a brief moment and returns with a large Aquarium on wheels. It is covered by a large cloth. Once inside Nino then removes the cloth.}

Nino: Ohhh look everyone, it is Glub and Glub. Come here and look Etevaldo, remember when they saved us from a shark while we were diving for pearls?

Glub, and Glub, speaking at the same time: Hello Nino, and Etevaldo. It is nice to see that you are safe, and hopefully are not doing things that are dangerous any longer.

Etevaldo: Hello. Yes, I recall you very fondly. It is good to see you both again. I feel like you seem so helpless in that aquarium, when both of you had the entire ocean of your planet to play in before.

Admiral Costa: Don't worry my friend, they are only in there for this short visit, and then I will return them to their home, but they want to be here on this momentous occasion.

Phobe: Wow, fish with human like faces, we don't see creatures like this in the USA. Where do they come from, and how did they get here? Beakman have you ever seen these type of creatures before?

Beakman: Well, you see, they are special creatures from the deep sea, and their human like face is the result of, umm, ahh...

Liza: Yeah, yeah, I am familiar with creatures like this. I used live next door to a scientist that raised three human sized "Sea Monkeys". Before I meet Beaky-Brain here.

{She then pats Beakman on the shoulder.}

Beakman: Really? You had another scientist before me?

Liza: Once you go scientific, you never want to go back. {She then winks at the parents of the children.} However ever since I was on Beakman's show, I have been interested on vocal dialects, accents, and music. Which reminds me, I want to record the voices of all the people here at the event. I use the recordings for research, and to help me create voices for the cartoons, and video games that I've appeared in.

Jose: I also work as a voice over actress. I produced my own one-women stage productions, I appear in movies, and television shows also. I've played in Spider-Man, and Batman cartoons, and have also been in a movie that had Johnny Depp.

Biba: I remember Johnny Depp, I always thought he looked very dreamy.

Pedro: Yes, but he was quite older then us at the time, and had already been in several movies.

Maca: Girls always fall in love with movie stars. Yuck!

Zeca: Hahaha, that's my boy, he thinks girls are gross now, but that will change in a few years.

Liza: I appeared in a video game that Johnny Depp was also in. And I played various characters in famous games like "Lord of the Rings", and "Final Fantasy". I also produced, and made my own one-women show, and played, and toured with several bands.

{The camera moves to the kitchen, and from behind the counter is seen Radialista a hyperactive radio disc jockey (puppet), Anne Ouncer (Jose, in a new costume), and Jim Shorts (Beakman in a new costume).}

Jim Shorts: Wow, it looks like the there is a competition in who has done the most impressive performances.

Anne Ouncer: Yes, Beakman... Jim... Things are really getting heated over who could claim to be the most successful.

Radialista: Things are really action packed here, who will be declared the best. Who will be the most skilled at this exciting battle of the minds. Let's return to the action, and see how things are unfolding.

{The camera then returns to the conversation in the other room.}

Phobe: Before meeting Beakman, I mostly did theatrical stage plays, and musicals. I danced, and sang. Now my home is mostly acting on television, when I'm not helping Beakman. I've learned GREEK {parody of television series she appeared in}, appeared in movies, and I am really good at trivia games thanks to Beakman's World. I was able to perform stage, and film acting, along side some great actors, and even the comedian Ray Romano.

Jose: I also did a show with Ray Romano in it. Wow, it is a small "Beakman" world isn't it?

{They continue talking comparing their skill. While walking past Penelope, and her husband Ulisses, walk past.}

Penelope: Ulisses, please come along, we have more of the castelo to document, with your video camera. It seems every time we visit here, the castelo has changed. It is truly a magical place. I hope Nina is enjoying her time with her old friends, I wish we had more time to visit, but a documentary about this castelo, and a chance to chronicle the lives, and structure of the castelo, are too big of a chance to let slip away.

Ulisses: Yes dear, this will make a great presentation. It is always so enjoyable when we can work together, and also enjoy ourselves with your friends, but still have time alone.

{They then use their nose to rub against the others nose, in a almost kiss. They then walk past a puppet flower, and Ulisses stops to touch it. It bites him.}

Planta Carnívora: I don't reach out and grab you, as you pass. Keep your hands off me, or they will be bitten again.

Ulisses: Sorry about that, I keep forgetting that things aren't as they seem in this place.

{He then quickly moves away, and looks at his finger. The camera then zooms in over his shoulder to look at his finger, and fades to black.}

{A giant white screen is then seen. In a speeded up time lapse sequence, a man with a paint bucket on his head, walks in from the side of the screen, with a ladder, and a painting palette. He then begins drawing on the wall. And then runs out of paint, he then leans his head forward, and tips his bucket up slightly from his forehead. Paint drops onto the palette, and he finishes the drawing of a garden. He then stands leaning against the ladder, as time returns to its normal speed. Then a guy with big glasses, a French painter's hat, and a moustache, walks out of the screen from the other side. He carries a painter's easel, and a marker.}

Mark Mothersbaugh: Hello boys, and girls, I'm Mark. Today I'm going to show you how to draw a Venus Flytrap. Although they aren't very dangerous to us people, they do eat various insects. First we start with the roots, and work up towards the leaves, and this section, which looks like a mouth is called its lobes, and on these lobes are trigger hairs that look like teeth. Yow, I wouldn't want to be a insect, and get stuck in there. Luckily these plants can't uproot themselves, and move around.

{After finishing the drawing he touches the drawing with the back of the marker, and it fills magically with color. After he has colored all the places on the plant, the lobes close as if trying to bite the marker. It then leaps off the easel {a digital clip and paste animation}, and goes into the garden. The other painter sees this, lets out a scream, and runs away. Mark quickly draws a bone, and picks it off of the easel, and throws it off the screen. The Venus Flytrap then runs after it.}

Mark Mothersbaugh: That just goes to show you kids, you should always be careful around plants, or animals of any kind.

{The scene then changes to the inner plumbing of the Castelo where Mau, and Godofredo live, and they are now arguing.}

Mau: I tell you it is true, every potato has eyes that it can use, to see things around it.

Godofredo: I don't believe it, they can not see, and there are no eyes. Let us go and ask Beakman.

{Back in the main hall, Nino's grandpa Aldebaran arrives, bringing his friend Professor Berinjela, dictionary salesman. Cousin of Dr. Abobrinha.}

Aldebaran: Nino my boy, so good to see you, where is Vito, and the lovely Morgana?

Berinjela: I hope they don't open that door too often. I saw my cousin Pompeu Pompílio Pomposo out there, or as the children around her call him Dr. Abobrinha.

Aldebaran: I'm sorry Nino, where are my manners. This is Professor Berinjela, and who are these guests of yours.

Nino: This is my friend Beakman, his sister Jax, and their laboratory assistants, Jose, Liza, Phobe, and that guy sleeping over there, in a rat suit. His name is Lester.

Beakman: Pleased to meet you Professor Berinjela, and you also Mr. Aldebaran. Nino forgot to mention one of our fellow country men. Hey, Professor come and meet another professor, I think you will have lots to talk to each other about.

{The camera shifts to the side, and a old man walks into the room with a cane. He walks up to them, squints his eyes, leans in extra close, and then adjusts his glasses. His fingers go through the frames, wiping away something from his eye.}

Professor I.M. Boring: Hello. I can not talk long, somehow the lenses from my glasses have decided to go missing. And I must find them, or I will be bumping around in this place all day.

Jose hears this, and begins to look worried: I'll help you to a nice safe corner were you can watch things.

Professor I.M. Boring: I don't want to sit down, I want to find my lenses, and I need to find that worthless grandson of mine. Beakman! Where are you? Sometimes I wish I could just give up on the entire 'Place' family. But I did educate them from when they were small, and I did promise his mother I'd look after them, before she died. I will always miss Beakmom, I keep a picture of her here in my pocket, here take a look. She even inscribed it to me, it says "To my loving brother Professor, Ian MosEisley Boring, With love Jeanne 'Beakmom' Place. That was sweet of her to do. Do you agree? I allowed only her to use my full name. My students say I.M. Boring, and I approve of that. I don't even let Beakman call me grandpa, instead I insist on him calling me by my academic title. Only Meekman seems to have inherited anything from my side of the family. Now if you will excuse me, I've got more important things to do then talk with you.

{Jose then leads him to a a chair in the corner. He resists and complians the entire way there.}

Professor Berinjela: Beakman, it is a pleasure to meet you. As we were coming up to the castelo. I saw this box outside addressed to you. Do you think it could be from my weasely cousin out there?

{Beakman accepts the package, and checks the label.}

Beakman: This is a package I've been waiting for, ever since I arrived.

{There is then a loud noise, and at just that moment, from the wall, and the center cone seat, Mau and Godofredo appear.}

Godofredo: Beakman, Beakman, Beakman, we need you again. Mau says it is true, but I don't believe him.

Beakman: Is what true? Give me your question, in understandable words, and I will try to answer it.

{Baba, and Biba, then come over and translate for Beakman.}

Mau: I told him, and he will not believe me. Here look for yourself. Does this potato have eyes, or doesn't it?

{Beakman walks over to the wall, and looks at the potato. Biba then translates for Beakman.}

Beakman: Some people do say that potatoes have eyes. And these are what the spots are sometimes called.

Mao: See I was right, I'm always right. Wahahaha. I win again, I am always right.

{Beakman then goes over, and sits on the cone seat near Godofredo, and the package.}

Beakman: The eyes are actually sprouts from which new potatoes can be grown. And 'Fast Fact', the word "Spud" actually came from the word sword, or dagger, that was used to make a hole, to plant the potato inside. However these eyes do not see, but you can call them anything you like. Remember do not to eat the 'Eyes' if they are damp, or feel squishy, because they can easily grow mold, and that could make you sick.

Godofredo: Ohh, it looks like I was right this time. I love being right. I remembered a few things I had heard, and thought about what I knew. I'm glad I was right, and could prove that Mau was wrong yet again.

Beakman: It doesn't matter who was right, or wrong. It is important that you learned something new, and shared its knowledge with others. Now lets see what is in my package. I think you, and Mau will find something interesting in here, that you can relate towards.

{Beakman opens the package, and everyone gathers around.}

Nino: Is it one of those Chinese boxes, within boxes, puzzles? There seems to be a lot of packaging.

Maca: What is it? A Egyptian mummy?

Baba: I think it is some sort of doll.

Beakman: This is my first co-host. His name is Patsy, he has been sealed away in this box for over 20 years.

{Beakman begins unwrapping the paper, and the arms, and legs of Patsy begin moving on their own.}

Sancho-Esteban: Why was he put in there?

Patsy: Is it safe? Beakman, there aren't any more explosions, or fires out there are there?

Beakman: No Patsy, there are no explosions, or fires today. You see children, Patsy was on my very early demo reel, for my television show. There was a gas leak, and a explosion, the lab got really cold, and he decided to retire from performing on that day.

{Off in the corner, a guy in a rat suit is seen seated watching the events, after hearing the news about Patsy retiring after one day. The rat suits head dips down, and a hand rubs his burnt, and bumped old head. He then raises both hands, while swinging his tail off to the side, as if to gesturing 'Why didn't I think of that'.}

Beakman: It was Patsy's first day on the show, and he decided he'd rather sleep the years away like "Rip Van Winkle". Have any of you heard of that story by Washington Irving?

Pedro: I remember that story, it is a classic.

Patsy: I don't want to seem rude, but what are all those things that everyone is pointing at me?

Beakman: Oh, yeah, I forgot. You've missed a few things since you've been asleep for all these years. Those are cell phones, and inside each phone, there is a miniature camera. The computers in those phones have about 1,000 time the memory, and speed that our old computer did back in the old lab. Before it got destroyed in that earth quake.

{Just then the clock begins to chime.}

Religio: It's almost time, the big moment will be here in only a hour.

Nino: Big moment? What is this big moment, which everyone keeps mentioning?

Liza: They haven't told you yet? Well I guess you'll see, hehehe.

Religio: The time has almost come to celebrate. Get prepared. Everything must be ready, now is the time for...

{Beakman, then moves in front of the clock to stop it from revealing the secret.}

Beakman: Yes, its time for... The Beakman... Challenge...

Jose: Hold it right there amigo. I've been on this fantasy ride for nearly 25 years now. I've sat through all those Beakman Challenges of your, the Phobe Challenge, the two Liza Challenges, three Lester Challenges, and even two Scratchy Challenge challenges.

{A hand twisted into the shape of a birds face, raises from in front of the camera, and nods agreement with her, while looking at Beakman.}

Jose: Not now Scratchy, I'm not in the mood.

{The hand quickly disappears again.}

Jose: If you don't believe me, here is the paperwork, everyone here has had a 'Challenge' of their own, except me. I am no longer the younger kid that knew little about science.

Beakman: Well there is Ray that didn't...

{Beakman is warned not to interrupt, by fingers pointed at him, from both Phobe, and Liza.}

Jose: I demand a challenge of my very own, I have earned the right to pose a puzzle, that even you may not be able to solve. I have had all these years to perfect my plans of triumph. I dare you...

{From near the camera, the rat suit stands up, and starts to applaud. He then, with a little bit of effort, sits back down.}

Beakman: When your right, your right. I now pass the 'Challenge' torch to you.

{At the mention of a torch, Patsy then climbs back into the box. Beakman then hands a imaginary flaming torch, to her, as if in the Olympics. She then holds that hand out, for the world to see.}

Jose: Then its time... At long last.. For the 'Jose Challenge....' I challenge you Beakman, to use these things on the table.

{She then runs into the other room, and drags a large table into the room. On the table are lots of different objects.}

Jose: I challenge you Beakman, to build something, which brings the faint things visible, and the sky closer.

Beakman: Oh a riddle. Did you play the character of 'The Riddler', in that Batman show you appeared in? Well, let me think. Faint to brighter, means it has to do with light. And sky closer means that the view gets bigger. The answer is a telescope. Now lets see, here are a few cardboard tubes, and some lenses, and magnifying glasses, along with other things. I think I can build a workable telescope from them.

Professor I.M. Boring: Lenses? So that's where the glass, for my glasses went.

{Jose then looks angrily at Mau.}

Mau: Sorry, but you said you wanted the things fast, and you didn't care where they came from.

{She then gives Professor I.M. Boring, back his lenses for his glasses.}

{Beakman then picks up two lenses, and slides a large spot light over to the center of the table. He then measures the distance from the table to the the lens. When the light reaches a single point. He then cuts the tube to the correct size. He then places a lens on a tube. The lens is bigger then the tube. He then places another tube on the lens. He then tapes the two tubes together with the lens held between them. He squishes one end of the tube, and on the other end he peels back the tube, and creates a smooth place for a person's eye to rest on. He then takes the squished end of the tube, and places it in another tube. On the opposite end of where the two tubes join he tapes a bigger lens.}

Beakman: There all done. It is not exactly like a Galileo-Scope, but it is a simply designed refracting telescope. Which most people can build at home. But they should remember never to look at the sun with a telescope, or with their unprotected eyes.

Liza: That's nice Beakman, but even I think I could do better then that.

{She then takes a larger cardboard tube from the table, and two magnifying lenses, with handles. She next measures the length of the light, that reaches a point on the table. Then she cuts two holes in the cardboard tube. One hole she places about 3 centimeters from the end. And on the opposite end of the same underside, she places a second hole about 6 centimeters from the end. She then pushes the two magnifying lenses into the holes with their handles sticking out. She then turns the handles so the lenses are now looking down through the tube. She then cuts a small hole from the 6 Centimeter hole, to about 12 centimeters, and slides the magnifying lens handle forward and backward, adjusting its focus.}

Liza: There Beak-Boss, I think I defeated you, at the challenge. Mine doesn't have tape on the lenses, and the extra area I left in front of the telescope means the front lens has protection from being scratched. Besides I also get to carry it like a Bazooka.

Phobe: I want to try also.

{Phobe takes a tube, and places a mirror inside of it. Tapes the mirror's end to the top of the tube. It is now hanging at a 45 degree angle with the shiny side inside the tube. She then cuts a hole above it, so she can look into the tube, see the mirror, and what is at the other end of the tube. She then places a lens at the front of the telescope, it is the same size as the one Beakman used, so she does not have to measure the focal distance. Tapes it to the tube, similar to how Beakman did it, on his other tube. Then she cuts a inward arch, at the end of another tube. So that it fits, and can be attached with tape onto the outter tube, above the mirror's hole. She then used tape to hold a second lens over this eyepiece tube, which is looking down at the mirror.}

Phobe: There all done. A nice example of a reflecting telescope, if I do say so myself.

Jose: Yes, all these are great ideas for a telescope, but what if you put all those ideas into a single telescope. You would get something like this. Ray if you will please, give me a little time lapse magic.

{She then uses the largest of the tubes, it is about as big as her leg. She then places a large glass paper weight into a metal bowl, add some Silicon carbide, 5 micron abrasive, adds a little water, and begins grinding her own lens. She measures it's focal point, and then she places it between two smaller tubes, seals it with glue to the tubes. Then she glues a thick strip of cardboard inside the larger tube, making it a inner ring. Next she places the smaller tube with the lens, back into the larger tube until the strip stops it from moving. She then glues a second strip in front of the inner tube so it will not move. She then slides a mirror into a the back end, and marks where it will be. Then below the mirror she cuts three small holes, in the large tube. In the holes she places three small poles that she later glues to the mirror, to support the mirror. She then cuts a hole above the mirror, and creates a eyepiece tube. She places the second lens in a smaller tube, and instead of taping it, she cut a hole in the tubes side, and pushed it through. She then carefully glued the lens to the inner side of the tube. The lens and tube now slipped down into the eyepiece tube. But to stop it from falling all the way to the mirror, she added a small strip above the lens, so the lens could be lifted, or lowered into the eyepiece tube.}

Beakman: Wow, she really must have worked hard on practicing this before actually doing this.

Jose: There it is a wonderful combination of styles, creating a much better telescope. However to make it better we should have painted the inside of the tubes black, with paint that in not glossy.

Dr. Vito: To see how good they are, let us test them by looking out this window. Set them up, and Nino can be the judge.

Nino: I don't know if I want to be a judge. Everyone seems to be keeping secrets from me, and that is not nice.

{Zula the blue girl, now a women, then talks to Nino.}

Zula: Remember how I felt when I came to this castelo, and nobody wanted to talk to me, or play with me? I want you to do what I did. Be there for the others, even when they don't seem to be so nice to you.

{Nino rubs his toe on the round, and moans a bit, and then agrees. He walks over to the telescopes, and looks through the lowest powered telescope first.}

Nino: I can see a bit farther, then using my unaided eyes. But there seems to be a error in making it, I see a big streak.

{He then goes over to the next telescope. Everyone waits quietly, and begin to smile.}

Nino: This one is much better, but the streak is still there. It almost looks like a meteor.

{Julie Christensen then steps forward, and stops him from looking through the other telescope. Julie then performs her song 'Meteor', which she co-wrote with Joe Woodard, for her album 'Where The Fireworks Are'.}

Julie Christensen: But is it just one more meteor? Crashing through the atmosphere? Going way too fast for me to hear.

{After she finishes her song, there are cheers, applause, and laughter. She then slowly lets Nino look through the last telescope.}

Nino: Now, when I can focus it. I can almost see it now. Oh... It looks like... That's it, it must be! Mama, and Papa returning, returning after all these years.

{He then turns to all the guests, and family members. They are all smiling, and as they see his smile, they begin to cheer again. Nino's smile begins to fade, and his body starts to sway, and then everything fades to black.}

{Nino wakes up on the floor with everyone standing around him.}

Dr. Liza: Stand back please he needs some air. Are you okay Nino? You have been unconscious for about 10 minutes.

Nino: I'm sorry, to have worried you. I started feeling light headed. It was as if I started seeing fireworks before my eyes, and I guess, I just fainted.

{In the background accordion music can be heard, a violin, and a voice describing bubbles.}

Dr. Vito: Sorry Nino, I did not know that the sight would effect you so much. I first learned about their return several years ago. Remember that comet that passed by long ago. That was their message, and it told how they were going to be away for a few more years. I did not want to break your heart, or give you hope that they would return on this day, and then find that they were unexpectedly delayed yet again.

Etevaldo: Yes, that is correct. Last time I saw your parents out in space, they told me that they hoped to be home by the year 2,000 and I got the date, and the distance in light years confused when I told you. There are always more people out there for them to help, while Dr. Vito does his helping, here on this planet.

Morgana: Yes Nino, we did not know when they would return until about two weeks ago, when we got a second message. And that is when we suggested the vacation, and that you invite all your friends to the castelo.

Adelaide: The best present we could give, is the gift of family. And we knew it was something you would not believe, until you saw their arrival yourself.

Godofredo: Yes Nino you are the greatest, but you can sometimes be untrusting of others.

Nino: Me, I trust everyone, I'm the perfection of understanding. So when are they going to get here? It must have been terribly lonely for them also, out there in the space between the stars.

Et-Cetera: It is a quite, and lonely place, unless you have someone special to pass the time with. Like you do when you share your time, with others here at the castelo.

Etevaldo: Out there in the universe, you can also meet some strange, and remarkable people. While traveling I meet a doctor, that later inspired me to build the time machine that we went back in time with. But I never got to spend much time with him, he was just on his way from here to there, that Doctro Quem is not known.

Meekman: Space travel? I would hate to do that. I would surely get space sick. I get motion sick, on planes, boats, and busses. Even on the way here I vomited twice. Here look into this bucket, it is almost full of my vomit.

Beakman: Remember brother of mine, that it is important not to open the seal, and contaminate the samples. Please close the bucket before you make everyone else sick.

Doctor Liza: That is why we are her, to keep everyone healthy and strong on the journey here. And on the way home, isn't that right nurses?

Nurse Phobe: That's right you young children. We are also here to look after you also. While we are staying these few days. We will make sure you get your vitamins, and plenty of exercise.

Nurse Jose: That is correct, not a week goes past without there being a explosion in the lab, or some harmful spill on a labcoat, or leg. It is a full time job looking after the 'Beakman's World' crew. As Beakman conducts his research, and just seems to try mixing two random things together, and then writing a article warning people to not do what he just did. Remember when he was trying to get that sculpture on the ceiling down, by using a pole, and he and the ladder crashed to the ground? It took the three of us to prevent him from running around the lab, even with his broken foot.

Nurse Phobe: It sometimes seems as if he is as accident prone, as his brother Meekman.

Meekman: Yes I'm really lucky to have three such beautiful ladies looking after me. Although I do get a little embarrassed when they have me lift my robe, so they can hit my knee with that little hammer. I'm glad I finally got brave enough to leave that other doctor, and that nurse of his Ms. Bendover. It seemed like all they did was want to cause more harm, rather than to help me. It's not like I'm paranoid or anything, I'm just extra cautious.

Caipora: The thing I hate about doctors, and some animals are the needles. I was in the forest, and meet this creature with large spikes sticking out of its back. I barely got near it, and got a quill in my arm. How was I supposed to know things like that could climb trees. I was just sitting there eating some fruit. I thought they mostly lived in North America, and Europe, and I wanted a closer look.

Jax: Actually, there are many spiny creatures around the world. Even if you lived in Australia you wouldn't be safe from such creatures, there they have a spiny Tachyglossidae, which are native to Australia, and New Guinea.

Liza without the doctor's uniform on: I once wrote a song about Papua New Guinea. They had a unique way of ending a war without fighting.

Jax: Wars are usually the sad result of disagreements. Some people are just easier to get along with, and other people want to do things their own way. I remember once when Beakman was doing a experiment with Sulfur dioxide, and I told him about the reaction that would happen, but he didn't listen. Luckily my brother always works with his safety equipment. Once we went to the library to study, and he fell asleep on the library table. That week, I had to answer the question for our comic, and I allowed the television show to film him sleeping. He didn't know about that until the episode was broadcast. Hehehe. He likes trying the same experiment a hundred times. While I research, and try to do the problem solving before the experiment. You may have noticed he is hyperactive, and gets exited easily. I do not, I think things through first, and then come to a logical conclusion.

{The Ratinho mobile drives by, and Jax jumps out of the way, with a scream, and then runs behind Beakman. The Ratinho mobile then enters the hole in the wall, and the claymation Ratinho jumps out, pushing a piece of pizza with him. There are then a series of scenes with him pushing bits of sandwiches, and other food into a corner, and eating them. Some of the food in the back of the corner is rotten, and he begins to feel sick. The song he sings is a warning not to eat too much, and to avoid eating rotten food.}

{The scene returns to the entry way, and the bubble show of Louis Pearl, with his wife, and Liza providing the music. Phobe started tap dancing along. While Louis made rainbow bubbles over the children, and showed them how to blow, baby, giant, and bubbles inside bubbles. He then ended his show, with fog filled UFO bubble blasting off, and saying.}

Louis Pearl: That is how Nino's pasrents got up there, and in just a few minutes they will be here once again.

{There were then clock chimes, and a fog came in from under the door as they opened.}

Religio: The time has come, they have returned at last. Here they are ladies and gentlemen, and especially you Nino.

{From behind the magic fog, a man, and his wife walk into the castelo. He looks similar to Nino but older, (same actor), with different thinning wig in more of a Beatles/Frankenstein type hair style, and facial hair similar to that of Dr. Vito. She has her hair in satellite dish style hair, on top of her head, which seems surprisingly like the ears on the Ratinho mobile. (She is performed by the same woman, that also played Morgana.) She has a bigger nose, and padding around the eyes. Both husband, and wife have slightly hunched backs.}

Antonino, holding Cleopino's hand: Thank you our friends, and family. It is great to be back home. It has been too long. And we have seen too many hardships in the universe. But there is nothing like being home, and with family, and those you love. Thank You all for being here to greet us. Nino come here, and give your mom, and father a hug.

Nino: Papa, Mama, welcome home. We have tried to keep everything just as you left it. I would like to introduce you to all my new friends. This is Beakman, Jose, Liza, Phobe, sleeping over there is Lester, and near him Beakman's grandpa. These other people are their friends also from the USA, Julie Christensen, Louis Pearl, and his wife Jetty Swart, also known as Jet Black Pearl. Which reminds me, we still have one of those around here, I would like to give her. I will be right back.

{Nino leaves, and the other guests begin introducing themselves.}

Pedro: Hello, I am Pedro, and this is my son Sancho-Esteban, my wife just joined us a few minutes ago. I'm glad she could meet you. Her name is Zula.

Antonino: Yes we have meet Zula before, and her sister Bluegirl, when we visited the 16th dimension. Bluegirl, puts on some of the best circus performances that the universe has ever seen.

Zeca: My name is Zeca, and this is my son Maca, which is short for McDonald. This is my lovely wife Nina, the daughter of Penelope, and Ulisses.

Cleopino: Ahh yes, we heard about that, it was nice of them to name Nina, after our son Nino.

Biba: Pleased to meet you, I've heard so much about you from Nino. I feel like you are partly my parents also. This is my daughter Baba, short for Barbara, this my husband Neneco. He first visited the castelo shortly after you left, just as I did. We meet, and it was love at first sight. This is my close friend Mariana, which introduced me to Neneco. Without her my life would probably be very different now.

{Bongo then introduces himself, and his parents. Next Caipora, and then Etevaldo, and his sister Et Cetra greet Nino's parents. Then Patricia Brown, with her brown bat named BJ, also introduce themselves. Nino returns, and gives Jetty the black pearl that he found.}

Jetty: I also have something for you Nino. Here are three CD albums of my music the first two are of me, with my band "Yeti", and the third is my solo Extended Play {EP} album. From them you can hear me perform many more songs.

Nino: Thank you, I will be sure to play them load, so everyone in the castelo can hear your music. Thank you again.

Antonino: I also have a gift for you son, here is a book of spells and magic. But be careful with them.

{Nino flips through the book, and then begins trying to work a spell, by waving his hands in the air.}

Nino: I am so happy, it feels like I'm floating in the air.

{He then looks down, and sees that he is floating. Beakman then reaches up, and grabs his hand, then pulls him back down.}

Antonino: I've missed that about being around here. Everything works like clockwork, until all the sudden everything goes out of control.

Beakman: I've got a saying for things like that. Should we tell him what it is?

Jose: Bada-Bing

Liza: Bada-Bang

Phobe: Bada-Boom

{Then everybody starts singing.}

Everyone singing: Bum, Bum, Bum, Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum, Bum, Bum, Bum, so goes life in Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum.

{Nino throws his hands out to the side in a load cheer of happiness.}

Nino: Zallooom

{Beakman pulls him back down again, and then says.}

Beakman: And Cassssio.

{The camera then zooms in on their happy faces, and then the screen fades to black as the ending credits scroll past.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain how glue works. First there is a explanation of how glue 'fits' between the items being glued, and then how it dries and leaves a bridge between the items. There is then a fast fact about proteins, and the difference between glue, and other adhesives. Next there is a experiment of sticking two pieces of glue together using skim milk, vinegar, and baking soda to make glue. There are then more fast facts about Casein. Lastly there is a description of how the glue carried into the proper position by the water, when then dries creating the bridge. A similar experiment was seen in Season 2, Episode 06 {S2E06} of Beakman's World, with Art Burn giving the directions on making the glue.

There are illustrations of a frying pan, strainer, milk carton, and two pieces of wood, with glue holding the pieces together.

This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman gives the moral support.

About a year, and a half ago. Paul Zaloom appeared on a Mexico television show, that featured interviews, science, and guests. Two puppet ants were dressed as Don & Herb, and another guest of the show was dressed as Lester D. Rat. Paul did a recreation of his Beakman's World audition, for the role of Beakman. He also get all the answers correct on a science quiz, and chokes a ant puppet to get a complimentary can of Escamoles. In all there are lots of great moments in this video, but sadly the show was canceled a year later. Here is a chance to relive a piece of Mexico history, and see a unique "Beakman's World" experience.

This is a series of screenshots from the Mexican television show "El Hormiguero MX". Although the show was only on television for about a year it featured Paul Zaloom as Beakman in one episode during the first month of its production. The series is based on a earlier series in Spain also called "El Hormiguero" {The Anthill}. The show was broadcast on July 13, 2014, and uploaded to their YouTube channel on the same day. However this version was not available to view in the USA or Canada, and required a Proxy server to view the video in those locations. The video was later re-uploaded to a "FANS Official" channel, on August 25, 2014. A similar styled interview was seen on Brazil television called "The Noite com Danilo Gentili", for November 14, 2014. With a guy in Lester suit, and two actors dressed as the penguins Don & Herb. There is a over dubbed female voice translating Paul's words. Most of what he says is difficult to hear, because of the voice over translation, and neither video has subtitles. The video is 42 minutes and 20 seconds in length.

The video begins with dancers dancing. Then the host Mauricio Mancera enters the studio and introduces Paul Zaloom. At first Paul appears on a video screen, as the host introduces his guests.

At 1:52 Paul Zaloom appears, dressed as Beakman, in the studio. He even does a parody dance of the "Walk Like an Egyptian" style of dancing. He then hugs the host, and says "Gracias" to the audience, for their applause. They then went over to the desk with a puppet stage at its front. The host then talks about Paul Zaloom, as Beakman, and Paul says "Call me Bruno."

Then at 2:55 Paul talks about finding out about the popularity of Beakman in Mexico. He talked about how he only learned about the popularity of the Beakman's World show "about three months ago." He says that he feels like "Sugar Man" {musician Sixto Rodriguez}, as depicted in the film "Searching for Sugar Man", {which Paul mistakenly calls "Waiting for Sugar Man"}.

Next at 3:30, Paul talks about the success of Beakman's World show, and its encouraging of children to learn science. Paul then jokes about hoping that he doesn't have to pay child support, for all of those kids. He then talks about how well he has been treated, and then he says "I thank all of Mexico". The host then tells Paul about how important Beakman was to him as a child. The host then gives him a hug. Paul then pretends to look a bit frightened and worried. Then Paul says he always looks "Scared and Worried."

Paul then at 4:55, talks about performing his "Beakman Live" shows. And he likes to interact with the excitement of the audience, and he can give that excitement back to them. Then he talks about how when he was leaving one show a woman grabbed his leg. He then jokes about it, saying "She wanted to drag me home, and have me as her pet."

At 6:25 Paul talks about posting pictures of his appearances at Mexico on Facebook, and that most people don't seem to believe him, when Paul tells other people about how popular Beakman is in Mexico.

The host at 6:50, asks Paul what it is like doing his "Beakman Live", and "Beakman on the Brain" shows. Paul says that he enjoys the improvisational interaction with the audience, and then gives description of both shows. And then he explains that the "Beakman on the Brain" show would be a bit more difficult to translate, but that he hoped to bring it to Mexico someday.

Paul at 8:00, talks about liking to eat things like Caviar and Escamoles {Ant Stew}. Paul says that, "Yes, I love this stuff man. I mean, I love eating bugs, and ahh, and we don't have enough bugs in the states. We don't eat them enough. But yeah I love them." When he says Escamoles, a ant puppet then comes out from a hole in the desk.

The ant then at 8:35, tells Paul that they are ant children. But Paul explains that the ants don't have to raise the children, send them to school, buy Christmas presents, if people eat them. The ant then suggests that Paul should eat guacamole instead. The host then suggests that Paul choke the ant puppet, and that it is a tradition. But Paul is a bit hesitant to do that, and finally does what was requested. Paul then pretends to spit on his hands as if preparing for a tough item to grasp. He then tells the ant, "I just want to say I'm sorry in advance." As he grabs the ant the sound of rattling can be heard, and it is supposed to be the ant eggs, leaving the ants body, and entering a can.

At 10:45 Paul then talks about how he got the job of playing the character Beakman. He explains that they found him in New York, and not in Hollywood. He then tells that at his audition that he spilled a glass of water and then played with the water, pretending it was cologne, and things like that. The host then quickly drinks a glass of water, and gives the empty glass to Paul, to reenact the screen test. Paul then pretends to spill the glass, and improvise working with the spilled water. Paul then mentions about his poor reenactment, that "If it happened today I wouldn't get the job."

The host at 12:10 asks Paul about what he thinks of the character Beakman. Paul says, "He's a freak, ahh, he's got somewhat a sense of humor, and he's from New York. So he talks with a New York accent, and ahh he loves the color green, and did I mention that he's a freak?"

Next at 12:35 the host says since Paul is a puppeteer and performs with his hands. He asks Paul to interpret various scientific events by using his hands. Paul then performs like a mime, first to represent the sun coming out, then water evaporating, followed by clouds forming, the temperature getting cold. The last thing Paul is asked to do is that it begins to snow. But before Paul can do this, fake snow begins to fall on the desk. Then two ant puppets come out of the hole in the deck. They are dressed as the penguins Don and Herb, {the puppet ant's names are Pichas and Cachas}. Then one of the ants says "Ola Beakman, you are handsome." Paul then asks if the ant has any more eggs. The ant says no, and Paul says "Hey look man, it is birth control." {Meaning that it helps control the population of ants, when their eggs are eaten.}

There is then at 14:54, a segment called "No Inventes con tus Inventos". Where Paul has to guess if a invention is real, or not. The first is a electronic ice cream cone that spins the ice cream so a person can lick it, without having to turn the cone. Paul say it is real, and that he had one, and it went too fast and came off the cone. He is correct.

The second invention is a dog height chair to feed pets. He says it is not real, and he is also correct.

The next invention is a paper disposable razor. Paul says that it is real, and he is correct.

The fourth invention is a flying robot that takes selfie pictures of people. Paul says he has a Flying Baseball type electric helicopter, {probably remote controlled, with the spinning wing on the inside, instead of on the bottom.} Paul says that the product "SelfieBot" is not real, and he is correct.

After being congratulated, Beakman and the host then leave the desk, and meet a guy in a "Lester" type rat suit. As he enters the studio, he Paul, and the host dance for a short time. This version of Lester has glasses, and Paul says "Yes, I'm having a great time. Nice to see you again." Paul later says "I think he lost a little weight." The guy in a rat suit then asks Paul if a ping-pong ball could go through a paddle. Paul does not understand what the question is. There is then a jump cut, as if the television show went to a commercial break.

At 19:32, Paul, the host, and the guy in the rat suit {Mauricio Nieto, Credited as "Mau Nieto"}, then hug. Then Paul suggests that they do that again, and "maybe some ant eggs will fall out of me." The rat guy, then explains that a air bazooka firing the ping pong ball, will launch the balls, at various paddles. For safety they are given goggles, and a several glass screens are placed in front of the audience. {At the bottom of the screen there is a explanation about there being a vacuum in one chamber of the bazooka, and camber being pressurized. And that the ball would be traveling at 360 meters per second.} After the shooting of the first ball, there is slow motion footage of the replay. The host then gives Paul the broken paddle and Paul puts it in his moth as if trying to eat it. Paul is then given the chance to launch the next ball, but the air escapes too slowly, and they have to try again. Paul explains saying "Look here's the thing. In science we're always making experiments. It wouldn't be science, and it wouldn't be experiments, if sometimes it didn't work. You know what I'm saying?"

Next at 25:35 a new experiment is pushed into the studio. They then Paul helps stir a solution, and turn a tube, that is coated with the solution, on its inside. During the preparations there is music and dancing. The host then does a limbo {ducking under} the tube. {There is then a explanation at the bottom of the screen that says the Trimethyl borate will make a green glow when it is ignited.} Then Paul, and the guy in a rat suit, then limbo under the tube. The lights are then turned off, and Paul and the host hold the tube as the flame jumps up through the tube, making a green glow, similar to a movie style laser gun. Paul then says "Hey, chemistry, man I'm loving it. I'm a lover for Chemistry. That's how we got the color of this coat." The guy in the rat suit then says good bye. And then there is a white flash, jump cut. As if there was another commercial.

The host at 29:44, introduces Ariana Ron Pedrique. She is pushed on a table top into the studio. She then has them stop, and she goes over and talks to the ant puppets, {now without their penguin suits}, before greeting Paul and the host. She then takes a string and ties it to a bottle, then has Paul hold the bottle, while the host pours a liquid on it, then she starts the string on fire. Paul has to turn the bottle so it is evenly wetted, and then that it burns evenly. There is a bit of music and dancing, then she takes the bottle and places it in cold water, and the bottle breaks at the place where the string was. But because of the delay in dancing after the fire went out. The bottle does not break evenly. Paul then has a question about the experiment, and the string. She then explains.

The host then announces it is time for the next experiment, and then Ariana leaves. "El Hombre de Negro" {The Man in Black} then enters the studio with a caged turning table. Paul greets him, and while the host tries to introduce him as Paul, and Beakman, Paul says "you can call me Petunia." As the man describes the experiment with the cage, Paul jokes about putting one of the ant puppets in the cage. The man then lit the material in a pan on fire, and the lights are turned off. Then in the cage, turns the cage table around, and the flame flows and becomes a flame tornado. Next after the man extinguishes the fire, he tells them that he has a even bigger version of the experiment. And a larger cage is wheeled into the studio. {There is then a text explanation at the bottom of the screen, telling how the metal mesh walls of the cage help to create a upwards ventilation current, as the cage rotates.} The fire is lit and the studio lights were turned out. As it turns Paul says "It's beautiful. It's really Beautiful, and amazing. I love it. Anyone got any marshmallows?"

After the experiment ends the lights come on, and "The Man in Black" is thanked, and the host then says thanks Paul for being on the show. Paul says sorry about choking the ant. Then the host says goodbye, and gives Paul a hug, as the ending credits scroll past.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain rubber balls bouncing. First Jax mentions how balls squish and expand because of the energy that is transferred to it. There is then a experiment described, which features dropping a tennis, and basket ball at the same time. Then placing the tennis ball above the basketball and dropping them again. {A similar experiment was seen in Beakman's World, Season 1, Episode 21 (S1E21).} There is suggestion to research the words "Big Bounce". This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman gives the moral support.

This bounce deal was something we worked to include on Beakman's World, but it pretty much needs to be done outside — and not on a TV stage-set. Outside is necessary, because the tennis ball will zoom up high as most houses. Not mentioned is the idea of reversing it. Put the basketball on top of the tennis ball and release them to the ground. What happens then? Try it and see.

This is a video documenting a art work/moving sculpture/Kinetic art piece created by Wayne White, for the Taubman Museum of Art. The piece is called "Big Lick Boom", and is meant to represent the history of the town of Roanoke, Virginia in the 1880's, which is the town where the museum is located. The video is 8 minutes and 2 seconds in length. It was uploaded on June 4, 2012, by William Sellari, for the museum, and was produced by Engines Roar.

Wayne White - Big Lick Boom, by William Sellari

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=i_q-HmsmEIY

The video begins with a close up image of Wayne's bearded face, as he is about to be interviewed. He laughs and says "Let's do it. I'm from Hollywood California". There is then timelapse footage of the sculpture being made, and the room being painted the sculpture's title. During this segment there is banjo music, and the sounds of a train.

At 0:38 Wayne introduces himself, and he says that "I live in Los Angeles, California, and I'm originally from Chattanooga, Tennessee." He then talks about his artistic skills, saying "I started off as a cartoonist, and illustrator. Then I became a puppeteer, and set designer, then a art director, and animator. Object builder, and now I'm a painter, and installation artist." While he is talking there are seen images of his other work such as the "Big Electric Fan to Keep me Cool While I Sleep" moving sculpture of a George Jones head, with a fan bow tie near its neck, {named after the lyrics in the song "I'm Ragged but I'm Right"}. {There was also a mini documentary made about the building of this "George Jones" sculpture also. As well as being seen in his film "Beauty is Embarrassing"}, and his 'word painting' titled "You're Just Laughing So I'll Shut Up".

Next at 1:04, he then talks about what he is building for the museum, saying that it's his "greatest, and largest piece {work of art} yet." Explaining that it is abased on the idea of the town being a "Boom Town" in the 1880's, {meaning large growth in a short time}, calling it a "explosion motif". He then describes sections of the sculpture, as they extend outward from a central point. The first section he talks about is the "Roanoke Machine Works Building", and some of its history. It is a building that is bent in a 'S' type shape with 45 degree angles. The next is a tall brick building that is meant to represent the sophistication and openness of society back then. This is followed by the Rorer Theater. He then talks about how the idea for this section is that a production of Hamlet caused a fights in the theater, and their is a "cartoon fight wheel spinning". Then there are several saloons, in a street like view. This is then followed by a stylized steam locomotive he says "it is literally the machine that built this town." {In the finished sculpture the wheels of the train also move.} He next says how he wants it to loom over the viewer, as if a threat, or they are being run over. "It was a very threatening, crazy, dangerous, violent time." Next on the 'explosion of scenes' is a politician "Railroad Baron", depicted as a puppeteer of a railroad police officer/railroad cop/"railroad bull".

At 4:00, Wayne says that "narrative is always on my mind." Then he explains how he likes to tell stories with his work. "If you can tell a good story, you got a audience." "It's the only way to express being human, is to tell a story."

Then at 5:00 Wayne talks about these type of "Public Works" that he creates, for the entertainment of people. Then he talks about his works being collected by art collectors. Comparing the two groups of people as the low everyday people's art, and the high class art that is meant to be collected and studied. He talks about how "I understand both worlds. I've spent my life reading books about the history of both worlds, and living in both worlds."

Next at 6:30 Wayne talks about how his hopes for such art, saying, "I like to think that this will bring people into a art museum, who've never been into a art museum before. And I guarantee you, that type of person will enjoy this. They will like it. They will find things to like, and the sophisticated art viewer will find things to like. I appeal to both, that's the trick I try to pull off." He then compares it to a circus, and a theme park. He then points out, that it has a train track around it just like Disneyland. Lastly he encourages people to come and look at it.

The video does not show the completed sculpture, but it does show various early drawings, and a miniature model of the work.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain how to learn new things, and that they do not know everything. There is then a list of three ways to 'find out' things. The Library, Internet, and the Telephone. Next there is a fast fact about the telephone, and listing of three things to remember when using the phone. Then there are examples of questions, who the reader might call to ask their question. It then explains what a "Yellow Pages" {phone book} is and what can be found in it. This is followed by a few tips about using the telephone, such as getting permission to use it, not to call long distance, and not to call "900" numbers {which are pay per-minute phone numbers}. There is then a explanation of a receptionists job, and how to talk with them. Then there is a example of the type of question that the reader can ask the business person. The example is calling a locksmith to learn how doorknobs work. Saying that "this is how we've done it for, like, 30 years or so." Lastly their is a suggestion to 'Google' search the words "Empirical Research". This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok give some details about the month of March. They tell that the word it is Latin for "Month of Mars", and a few facts about the month and the Roman god Mars, that it was named after. There are then a quick fact about Romans and how they got wealthy. There are four illustrations, the first is of a painting of the god, by Diego Velazquez. The second is of the planet Mars which is named after him. The third is a symbol for the planet Mars, and there is a explanation about the symbol's other uses. The fourth image is a illustration of a companies logo which incorporates the symbol, used by the automobile company "Volvo". Lastly there is a suggestion to research "mars.nasa.gov."

This week Beakman gives the explanation, while Jax remains silent and gives the moral support.

More then two years ago, Paul was in Mexico, at UNAM. The news site Reforma caught up with him at a event there, and talked with him about science, art, and even puppets. The video for this interview was in several different places, and it wasn't until now that we could present them in a full review of the various titles the video has been posted under. The interview is also conducted in a library, and there are several similar videos of Paul being interviewed in libraries, which had to be sorted through.

This is a series of screenshot images from a video interview, and news report by the website/newsgroup Reforma {Grupo Reforma}, about Paul Zaloom's appearance at the National Autonomous University of Mexico {Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, UNAM}. The video was originally posted on on February 18, 2014, on their website, and the next day on various other seemingly official locations, each with a different title. The video is 2 minutes, and 22 seconds, and features Spanish Subtitles in Spanish of what Paul says in English.

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=detCSyHjREY>

The video begins with Paul performing a demo introduction for the Reforma video, introducing himself, and then saying "so long" {good-bye}. There is then behind the scenes footage of him inflating some balloons, which are also attached to him. One of the balloons has a brain illustration on it. There is then footage of him at a panel news presentation, at the 75 Anniversary event for the Instituto de Física {Institute of Physics, of UNAM}. As an announcer talks about Paul's appearance as Beakman at the event.

The interview starts at 0:37 with Paul sitting on a couch in a library. Paul is dressed as Beakman, and first talks about how he discovered a "puppet theater company" {Bread and Puppet Theater}, a performance group, and joined them. He then makes a comparison to the way that he was "absorbed" into the group, to the way people can become interested in science, and how the scientific process works, saying "People can invent, and explore, and research, by themselves and don't need to be intimidated by it. It's very similar to the scientific process, the artistic process."

At 1:07 Paul talks about the Mexican painters, Velasco {José María Velasco}, Siqueiros {David Alfaro Siqueiros}, and Rufino Tamayo. Saying the Paul owns a printed image of Rufino Tamayo's painting "El Brindis". The announcer then talks about things that Paul has worked on since Beakman's World ended.

At 1:25, there is footage of Paul's films "Dante's Inferno", and "In Smog and Thunder". Paul then talks about making the film "In Smog and Thunder", and that it is a fictional story about two California cities declaring war on each other. The announcer then talks Paul's appearances in Beakman's World {El Mundo de Beakman}, and the success of the show in Latin America. There is then footage of the opening, and theme music of Beakman's World, followed by brief snippets of his appearance at the "70 Encuentro Interdisciplinario de Ciencias" {70th Interdisciplinary Meeting of Science}.

Lastly at 2:02 the video returns to Paul's interview, and he talks about wanting to work more in Mexico, and Brazil, including bringing his "Beakman on the Brain" shows, to those locations. He says "I've been touring all of my life and I enjoy it very much."

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain how computers work. First they describe how computers use switches/transistors to switch electricity on and off, using various programs/applications. There is then a illustration of a

Including the Input, Storage/Memory, Processing, and Output features. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the word "semiconductor". There are icon illustrations for the four stages, and a colorized illustration of a series of microchips.

Have you ever had "Deja Vu" {not the PC/NES video game}, the experience that you had done something before. Well in this instance, we will see Paul Zaloom, dressed as Beakman in two different videos. However they will both be from the same event.

So if your feeling like you did this before, it might be because you imagined the event through another person's point of view, at the same time as feeling disconnected from what you were doing. And just like these video you realize with a pop, that the event is happening slightly differently for other people. But in rare instances you can imagine what they are seeing.

This is a compilation image of screenshots from two videos featuring Paul Zaloom, at Campus Party Brasil 2015. They feature him giving a demonstration to a group of students, as he tries to teach them how to put a wooden skewer through a balloon, which was originally seen in Beakman's World S2E01. The videos feature slightly different views, and sections of his demonstration. The first video was uploaded on February 05, 2015, and the second video was uploaded on February 8, 2015. The first video is 2 minutes and 29 seconds in length. The second video is 1 minute, and 44 seconds in length.

Beakman faz o experimento da bexiga na Campus Party 2015, by Pedro Zambarda de Araújo

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Xq56ev1wZ2Q>

The first video starts with a women trying to push a skewer through a balloon, with Paul Zaloom, dressed as Beakman. He giving tips on how to twist the skewer, as she pushes. She twists but finds that the balloon only seems to wrap around the skewer. So Paul fills the balloon more, and she tries again.

At 0:35 Paul suggests that "who's the guy who wanted to do it," {made the suggestion to do the demonstration}. Then suggests that the student requester try the demonstration. Then Paul suggests that the student give his camera to someone else, so the he can do the demonstration. Paul then shows how to do the demonstration, by giving the student tips as how to hold the balloon by the tied end, and placing the skewer in the dark spot on its bottom.

{In the original episode of Beakman's World, he held the balloon on the side and stuck it near the tied opening, and then pushed it out at the small bump at its back side.}

The second video starts at 1:13 of the first video, but from a different angle. The student then tries to push the skewer in the balloon. He also can not get it to go into the balloon. Paul then tries to fill the balloon a bit more. The student then gets a new skewer from the package, while Paul says "try it this blown up. Because maybe the problem is that it is not blown up enough. You know what I'm saying? That it's resisting too much." He then fills it up a little more. He then says that "It smelled weird, like barbecue in there." One person off camera says that the experiment worked for them. Paul then tells the student to try again, and after a few seconds the balloon breaks.

The fist video ends with Paul giving the student a hand shake, and a one armed hug, saying "another disappointed fan." In the second video this is time 1:20. Paul then suggests that the student keep trying the experiment/demonstration. This video ends with Paul saying "I promise we didn't fake it. I swear we didn't fake it."

Sorry about having no review/video summary post last week. I didn't get it finished until a few minutes after midnight on Sunday, which is today. However today is Jok's Day, when the new "You Can With Beakman and Jax" comic is published by various newspapers, and sites. So I will post the interview/video summary on Monday, and hopefully it will be one of two video summary posts this week. I hope everyone enjoys this look at Jok's new 'Beakman and Jax' comic.

This week of Beakman, Jax, and Jok tell the readers about "Earth Day", {which will be held on April 22, 2016}. Instead of a answering a readers question, they explain how a peace activist named John McConnell came up with the idea of 'Earth Day'. There are facts about the "United Nations", and the UNESCO {United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization}, and their sponsorship of this day, set aside to promote the "taking care of our planet". There is a explanation of where the first celebration took place, and how it got its "Earth Day" flag. Next it describes how Peace Bells where rang in celebration of the day. This is followed by a retelling of how McConnell thought of the design for his 'Earth Day' flag. There are then a list of three ideas that a reader 'can do', during that day, such as planting a tree, ringing a bell, and becoming a "Earth Trustee", there is also a suggestion to research that phrase. There are two illustrations of a Earth circled in a wreath of plant vines, and a illustration of John McConnell holding his Earth Day flag, with epitaph "Earth Day Daddy, John McConnell 1915-2012".

Ever had art, or a song, on the brain, or stuck in your head. Well this time the art is the head, or at least a head. Wayne White, {the set designer, and animator of Beakman's World} makes a puppet version of, the head of, George Jones, a country and western singer. He talks about his inspiration for the project, and shows a brief glimpse of the construction of the kinetic sculpture.

This is a series of screenshots of a interview, and behind the scenes video, featuring Wayne White. He talks about, and prepares his moving sculpture "Big Lectric Fan to keep Me Cool While I Sleep". It is a giant puppet type version of the head of George Jones, a country and western singer. The title of the sculpture comes from the lyrics to the song "I'm Ragged But I'm Right" by George Jones. The big fan, is a bow tie type propeller that says "Dreaming" on each of its two propellers, it spins, while the mouth opens, and the eyes roll around, open and closed. Inside the head is a moving puppet on strings that bounces around, inside the brain area. This sculpture is seen in his film "Beauty is Embarrassing: The Wayne White Story", and can be thought of as a behind the scenes look at one of the projects seen in the film. The video was uploaded by the gallery that commissioned the building of the sculpture, the Rice University Art Gallery in Houston, Texas. The video is 7 minutes and 14 seconds in length.

Wayne White: BIG LECTRIC FAN TO KEEP ME COOL WHILE I SLEEP

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=meN2BGTUPVU>

The video begins by Wayne talking about the construction of the sculpture, how it's eyes rotate, and then he shows how the nose will fit onto the sculpture when finished. He then talks about the how the sculpture's mouth will open and close, when a rope is pulled, and music will play. There are then titles showing, his name, the name of the sculpture, and the gallery's name.

The interview begins at 1:16, he introduces himself, and tells about the sculpture he is building. And the side show display called "Ice House". There are then images of Wayne's sketches, and a image of the real George Jones on a record cover. He talks about his inspiration of Jones, and the town of Houston. Wayne then talks about himself, and how when he was young, he was a painter, then he began performing puppet shows. There are several images of his advertisement drawings for his puppet shows, and photographs of some of his puppets. He then talks about wanting to be a cartoonist, and there are several of his sketch book illustrations of the town Nashville, and Elvis Presley {Wayne also illustrated a book about his Elvis' life. He then talks about getting a job in "Mrs. Cabobble's Caboose", then how that lead to his work on to his work on the television show "Pee-wee's Playhouse". He talks about winning 3 Emmy Awards for that show, and that it became "the model for my life from then on." There are also illustrations and photographs from "Pee-wee's Playhouse".

At 4:05 Wayne talks about how he was asked to do this sculpture project. He then talks about how his first thought was about the gigantic room that he could use. He then talks about having had a small puppet head of George Jones fore a puppet that he never finished, and placed it into a model of the room. He said it reminds him of "a relic from a lost civilizations", and "a weird little toy that has grown to large in size, and the room itself is the box that the toy came in." He then says it is also a reminder of his old puppeteer days, saying that it is like "The Revenge of Saturday Morning Puppets".

Next at 5:15, Wayne talks about remembering the song "{I'm} Ragged But I'm Right" by George Jones, and the lyrics, and how he was feeling hot in his hotel room, when he came to visit the gallery in preparation of designing a exhibit for them. Saying "It was a natural instinctive thing, to do this George Jones head and base it on that song." There are then the credits for the video, showing the dates from September 10-October 18, 2009 that the exhibit could be viewed. It also says that many of the illustrations seen in the video are from Wayne's book, "Wayne White: Maybe Now I'll Get the Respect I So Richly Deserve". There then a link to the gallery ricegallery.org

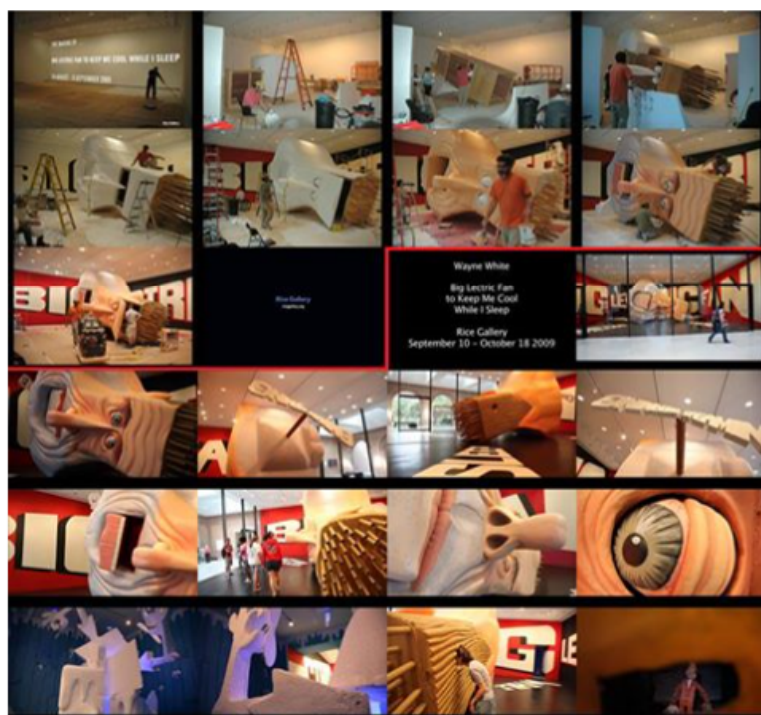

Lastly at 7:08, Wayne is seen standing next to the sculpture saying, "It's the world's largest George Jones puppet head, for sure."

Wayne White: The Making of BIG LECTRIC FAN TO KEEP ME COOL WHILE I SLEEP, by Rice Gallery

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=S04_Neql7es

The first video begins with a title screen, telling about the time this "Making of" video was filmed, from August 14 to the 9th of September, 2009. Although the video is a speeded up time lapse, there is no audio. It shows the room being prepared, and the beginning construction of the sculpture with a wooden frame. Then several sections of that frame are made into Eye, Mouth, and Brain box compartments. From there tube like hair is added, and various lumps are added to make the cheeks and nose of the face. It then shows these pieces being shaped into their final form, texture is then added, and then the entire sculpture is painted. It also shows the walls, and floor being painted. The last few things added were the "Dreaming" propeller, the mini puppet moving mechanism being placed into the brain box, and a pull-rope to operate the mouth of the large sculpture. The video fades to black, and there is a text message telling the dates that the sculpture will be on display, September 10 to the 18th of October 2009. Lastly there is a link to the Rice Gallery's website.

The second video was also uploaded as "Wayne White - Big Lectric Fan To Keep Me Cool While I Sleep @ Rice Gallery" by Vimeo user, Michael Brims. According to "Corporation Wiki" he is the President of the company that made the video. He uploaded it to his Vimeo channel on October 5, 2009. Later it would be uploaded to his

The video starts with a outside view of the exhibit, then a Curator of the gallery talks about the sculpture, Wayne White, and how the idea for the sculpture came about. Through out this video there are close up views of the sculpture, and the exhibit is seen from various angles.

At 1:07 a student, and then a Coordinator of the gallery talk about what they like about the exhibit. It is then explained that the sculpture is "23 feet, from chin to crown, and umm, I guess, 15 feet from cheek to cheek." The coordinator also talks about it being a toy in its box, with "road-side/billboard type lettering, and "a museum relic of a lost world".

Next another student talks about his thoughts about the sculpture, and then another coordinator of the gallery, she talks about how people walking by could see the project as it was being built and she got to visit with him while he was building it. A new student then talks about what she likes about the interactive parts of the exhibit and its entertainment properties.

Then at 3:02 in the video, it returns to interview with the Curator. He talks about the story of the sculpture, in that George Jones is sleeping after having gone to the "Ice Hose" {a mini sculpted building in another room}. Then people can look into the sculpture's head and see the mini puppet, that is a representation of George Jones dancing endlessly as if in a nightmare.

Lastly at 3:26 the second coordinator talks about the fun that the visitors have when the view the exhibit.

The video then fades to black, and lists the company that produced the video. It also shows its website address, but the URL no longer goes to their website site, which seems to have closed.

The hook, and their sweeper that helps them detach. Next the tiny hairs on the sweeper are described, and how they are covered with a sticky substance so that the fly can stick to slippery objects. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the word "sarcophagidae". There is a illustration of "1 of 6 fly legs", and yellow, and red perforated lines showing the open and closed shapes of the 'swivel hooks' on the fly foot. The background is meant to be white ceiling tile, with various microscopic valleys for the claws to attach to.

Some people like it hot, others like it cold, and so we return to Wayne White's "Big Lectric Fan...", exhibit, with its mini connection to Beakman's World. There are is also a link to buying Rice Gallery, exclusive Wayne White button, and book. Pretty cheaply $1 button. Then there's a $10 art book with 48 pages. A sort of companion to his earlier book "Wayne White: Maybe Now I'll Get the Respect I So Richly Deserve".

These are two exclusive Rice Galley items, which feature the work of Wayne White. The first is a small button with a early illustration of the George Jones image. The head seems to have four Frankenstein style electrodes. Two at its cheek, and two behind its eyes. It has a representation of Wayne's signature as "WW 2009", and in text that says "Wayne White, Rice Gallery 2009". Last time I checked it was still for sale on their site, and sold for $1. However it also costs $2 for shipping in the USA, for a total of $3. While the book cost $10, and came with a DVD, and had a similar $2 for Shipping in the USA.

* https://ebank.rice.edu/C21279_ustores/web/store_main.jsp?STOREID=2

The second item is a book titled "Big Lectric Fan To Keep Me Cool While I Sleep", it is 48 numbered pages, it came with a DVD, which featured several mini videos. Most of the content of the DVD was reviewed earlier, so we will only review the new stuff here, while linking to the other features which can be found elsewhere. Sadly the two books I ordered, seemed to have a small indents on the front of their covers, as if it were stored where the back of the button, was pressed up against the book, prior to shipping.

Book features;

The book begins with a illustrated introduction by Wayne White, as he describes his ideas for the exhibit. It has early sketch art, as well, as a series of blue dog heads on various stands. Wayne's Introduction, idea presentation is dated 7/5/09 {July 05, 2009}.

There is then a "Foreword by the Rice Gallery's Director Kimberly Davenport. Next there is a magazine article/review about the exhibit, written by Kelly Klaasmeyer.

This is followed by a newspaper article "Wayne White Gets Heady with His Latest Sculpture" by Andrew Dansby. Up until this point there are early drawings and photographs of the construction of the exhibit.

From pages 22-46 there are images of the finished exhibit, in close up views, and photographs of its mini gallery "Ice House".

Page 47 has "About the Artist" information, and page 48 features the copyright, and other staff credits. The book is also listed as being "ISBN: 1932281371". There is a blank black page inside the front, and back cover, and glued to the inside back cover, is a foam circle that holds the DVD.

The book has lots of images, illustrations, and the text is easy to read. Although the text is mostly previously published articles. Two interesting images are also seen, one is that the title "Big Lectric Fan to Keep me Cool While I Sleep", is also a phrase he used for a "word" painting, where he drew the letters over a already existing painting of a ocean wave crashing against some rocks. Another remarkable image, is a image from inside the sculpture looking out, with the eyes facing inward, and the small room type area that was built inside the sculpture. The illustrations also seem to show various changes in what the rotating propeller letters would say. Also that there were originally two pullies one for the eyes, and a second for the mouth, and inner puppet show.

DVD features;

Video tour, showing exhibit, its moving parts, and Ice House, side show, in close up. It features banjo music, and was filmed on September 30, 2009. There is also a mysterious hand, of a unknown person pulling the rope, {similar to how "Ray the Cameraman" was shown in Beakman's World}, which makes the mouth open, and the sound of snoring to be heard. The background behind the dream George Jones puppet can be seen moving, and the propellers inside the "Ice Hose mini galley room can be seen spinning. There are pan, and zoom-in camera effects but the camera mostly seems to stay in place as it video tapes one location and then cuts to the next location. No words are spoken. In length this video is 2 minutes and 52 seconds long.

This is a radio review of the exhibit for WaMu's {Washington Mutual} radio show, "Bluegrass Country", 4 minutes, and 45 seconds in length. Besides the audio descriptions, there are also images of exhibit. Still images of Wayne's other works such as early illustrations of Beakman's World set called "Beakman's Place", and other early concept drawings from his shows. The hostess explains that 5 times a year the Rice Gallery asks artists to create a exhibit for their gallery room. Measuring 40 by 40 feet in length. There is a sample of the "Pee-wee's Playhouse" theme song, song by Cyndi Lauper, {originally credited as "Ellen Shaw"}. The hostess then tells how the sculpture is nearly 16 foot to the rooms ceiling, and it has PVC tubes for hair. Pulling the rope causes George's mouth to open, and the sound of him snoring. She also tells how Wayne was inspired by Francisco Goya's drawing "Sleep of Reason {Produces Monsters}". The song "I'm Ragged But I'm Right" plays at 3:24 to 4:02.

An audio mp3 version of the radio review is available for download at their site, and it is 3 minutes and 59 seconds in length, while the video version on the DVD has a black screen and credits after the main radio broadcast is over. If you haven't heard yet, Jok Church author, of "You Can With Beakman and Jax", and creator of Beakman's World, died a few days ago, on April 29, 2016, from a heart attack. He was 66 years old. Please remember him, and that he wished for everyone to remember "A Good Question is a Really Powerful Thing." Jok Richard Church, November 28, 1949 - April 29, 2016.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain how the ocean water gets salty. First there is a few facts about its scientific name, and how many things have salt in them. Next the properties of water, and how it picks up, moves things^e is explained. There is then several illustrations, combined into a landscape showing the 6 steps in the water cycle, and a globe with vine like leaves surrounding it in a wreath type style. There is also a suggestion to research the subject "water cycle". {This subject was also explained in "Beakman's World" Season 1, Episode 01 (S1E01).}

I learned this morning that my beloved and dear friend Jok Church died on Friday of a heart attack in his home city of San Francisco. Jok was the creator of Beakman, the scientist from Jok's syndicated comic, U Can with Beakman and Jax, which was later made into a TV show, Beakman's World. I had the privilege to play the lead character on that show, and I got to know and love Jok as we worked together over the years. He was a kind, loving, supportive, generous, salty! sweet! great buddy and pal. I love you, Jok.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain soft, and hard candies, and how they seem to change over time. By Comparing Lollipops and the gelatin candy trademarked {TM} as Gummi Bears. Next they tell about how water is removed for the hard candies and that they eventually absorb it from the "humidity" in the air. Then there is a explanation that the Bears are already holding that water.

Next a few historical facts are presents, such as that the Bears were "invented" in Germany, and what they are made of, and then mentions another similar product "Jell-O". {Gelatin was discussed in Beakman's World, Season 4, Epidode 13, {S4E13} where Art Burn {Paul Zaloom} taught the viewer how to make it, in S4E26, he also showed how to make a lollipop.}

There is then a explanation of how some of the water is removed to make them into solds. next a experiment involving the Bears is suggested, another candy "Life Savers" is also suggested. First to put the bears in water, and see how much more water they obsorb. Second there is a suggestion to place the Bears in a over, {with parents help}, and see how the bears get hard.

There are closeup illustrations of the Gummy Bears, and lollipops of various colors, on a blue background. It is also suggested that the reader research the word "colloid". This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman gives the moral support.

Pitching an Idea to The Exploratorium

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iVrPpSisISQ>

The video begins with the animated Jok, which now has a full beard and moustache, {Jok usually wore a short goatee type beard and moustache.} He introduces himself, and beside him is a message that says "for: Robert Semper {he is the one of the director at the museum}, from: Jok Church".

He then talks about his idea to present the subject of carbon to the public. He then talks about "graphene nanotubes, {they're} pretty much going to save the world I think."

At 0:25 Jok talks about Carbon 60 {buckminsterfullerene} named after Buckminster

At 0:25 Jok talks about Carbon 60 {buckminsterfullerene} named after Buckminster Fuller. There is then a image of him, and behind him a ball shaped building the former "U.S. Pavilion" for the Expo 67 {1967 International and Universal Exposition}, now the Montreal Biosphère. Fuller helped to design it.

Next at 0:48 Jok talks about diamonds, then talks about crystalline structure. He explains their tetrahedron arrangement of the atoms. He shows two examples of his comic, and then photographs of newspapers rolled up and taped into the tetrahedron shapes. As these appear a chair appears behind him, and he waves his fingers as if they are guns and he point to all the tetrahedron in the picture, while a audio effect echoes his words. He then suggests that he would like to do this as a project with the public. He explains that they did it in a train station in Kansas City, Missouri, and he'd like to build a tower that reaches to the ceiling. He then says he'd also like to make a few buckminsterfullerene out of newspaper also.

At 2:00 Jok says "got my phone number got my email, please be in touch, and let's get together for a "Forms of Carbon Weekend" at the Exploratorium. Art by Jok."

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain how people make mistakes. And how they can make fewer mistakes. Next there is a description of a project that can test the viewer's observational skills. The experiment involves rolling up a piece of paper and covering a section of a illustration in the comic. There is a illustration of a bone shaped, rolled up newspaper. A real life version of this bone shape, is supposed to cover the central line of a two gray shaded areas. This is called a "boarder illustration image" and there is a suggestion to research the subject.

This week Beakman gives the explanation, while Jax gives the moral support.

Fisher.

As he is talking the background image changes to a behind the scenes, cast read through for the new Star Wars script. Then he talks about the cast, and shows a picture of Carrie Fisher, in her Princess Leia costume, but with Cinnamon Buns, as her curled hair on the side of her head. He then shows a photograph of the Skywalker Ranch, where Jok worked for George Lucas, and his company Lucasfilm. He then mentions how because of that, he say "that has allowed me access to things that a lot of, wouldn't ordinarily get."

At 3:25 a waffle with flaming backside flies past, as if a Star Destroyer ship. Next a steam iron is seen chasing the waffle. As the camera zooms in on the iron the video stops and animated Jok returns saying he does not want to spoil the rest of the film. He then tells the viewers to keep the secret until the release of the film.

Lastly at 4:47 Jok says "see You next week", and then the their is the "Really? Wow! Productions" logo.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain the difference between 'organic' and 'natural' foods. First a example of a 70% Organic product 'rice chips' is described. Next they talk about how the governmental laws that decide what is 'organic'. There is then a explanation of how a food can get 'certified' by the governments of Canada, and the USA. This is followed by a chart showing seven substances a food might have, and a list of three categories that substance may be placed in, "Organic", "Natural" "No Claims". The chart is then explained, most of them having a 'Maybe' listed in one or more of the columns. It tells how these chart definitions can become "really complicated". There is then a tinyURL link to the Unites States Department of Agriculture {USDA} list of rules. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the title "Lord Northbourne".

The background has a reoccurring leaf patter, and there are two certification symbols. One for the USA, and another for the Canada government, showing that food passed their certifications.

This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman remains silent, and gives the moral support.

Animation Take 3

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1RMsX2Xz2dw>

The video begins with various pieces of the animate Jok, arranging themselves into a stick version of the animated character, similar to the character of Mr. Potato Head. Another, actual animated Jok then walks into view, introduces himself. Saying he has "pulled myself together".

At 0:12 he talks about how he writes comic strips, which he has done for 25 years. He then says the comics were published in 11 languages, for 14 nations.

Next at 0:24 Jok shows a example of his comic, the logo and upper section. He then goes on to talk about the television show Beakman's World, and shows the animated Beakman, in the Beakman logo. He then shows photographs of Paul Zaloom as Beakman, and a picture of Mark Ritts as Lester.

At 1:04 Jok then talks about how Paul, as Beakman 'sold out' a soccer stadium, three times, for tickets, to Paul's live performances of Beakman. Jok then shows a newspaper with a head line about how it is unusually for younger people to buy newspapers, and that is hinted at, being the cause of the decline in interest in Beakman.

Moving on from "What's a matter/{problem}?" At 1:30 he decides to answer the question "What is matter?" But instead of just reading the comic he also goes into more detail. First he explains Physics, is a science that which came from earlier philosophy. Where philosophy got its start, and what the word means. He then explains that the Greeks wanted to understand the world without involving things like Myth, Magic, or Fantasy. Jok then talks about how philosophy, and astronomy, and geometry are related, because they tried to discover what is real, and provable.

He returns to the comics question at 2:52, and talks about Physics, and its study of matter, then he mostly explains the same things as the comic, but using slightly different words. He ends the video by saying "We're going to need to look at Atoms, Space, and Mass".

The rest of the comic gave examples of these things, but the video ends here. The video does not mention the things in the lower section of the comic.

BEAKMALLUSION: Free Energy Devices

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sT_bTnkwLuE

The video begins with a disclaimer that the video is Fan Fiction. Then the camera zooms in on Captain Disillusion, in his orbiting space house. He is looking out the window and feeling disappointed with his life, calling himself a fraud. His friend and assistant Ellie then arrives brings him a series of toys with questions about each of them, each asking about fake science videos that the viewer had seen online. He then goes through them saying how all the good topics have already been disproved. He throws out the toy, about the moon landing hoax conspiracy, Which he says the Mythbusters television series already did a episode about. As he tosses the toys they turn into video screens and fall to the floor. He then tosses a stuffed toy of a Bigfoot, with questions about Cryptozoology, he then explain that he isn't a host of a show like "Monster Talk". Next she holds out a squishy globe, and asks him to disprove the Flat Earth hypothesis. He explains that the YouTube series Vsauce already did that. He then explains how he is only good at noticing pictures on top of one another. He asks her if he has become 'Superannuated' {become useless, out of date}. She says she doesn't know what that means, and then she pulls out a strange looking cylinder from her bag, the cylinder has only one button on it with a "B". He pushes it, and all the sudden in a flash of light Beakman appears.

At 1:32 Beakman appears, and gives a quick fact, about HD video and the number of pixels it has. This he explains is making him look a little different {from age}. Captain Disillusion talks about some of Beakman's achievements. As he appears, there is a explosion, and holes in the walls, showing views of the "Information Center" {Beakman's laboratory} can be seen. Ellie then asks if Beakman "signs things", {gives people autographs}. Beakman then asks what century he is in. He then says how Ellie looks like one of his earlier assistants, naming all the female assistants until coming to Liza's name. He then introduced himself and begins to say that this is "Beakman's World", but before he can do that, Captain Disillusion explains that it is his show and he is a "web video debunker". Beakman calls himself a "TV scientist". Captain then explains that kids write to him about "weird videos", and wanting scientific explanations about them. Captain then gets a idea, very slowly, that he and Beakman show team up. Beakman and Ellie, already understand what he wants before he can ask.

Then at 3:00 There is the Beakmallusion, a parody of the Beakmania segment, mixed with the word "Disillusion". Ellie does the typical revving up with adjectives to describe what they are about to see. After her introduction of both of them, Captain and Beakman do the Debunkulate dance. Then Captain turns the letter bin, while Ellie watches it go round. There is then a quote as she opens it. A funny voice talks about being blocked due to copyright claim. Ellie then reads the question, and Captain then answers the question, about videos that show magnets supposedly using free energy. Beakman explains about Perpetual motion machines. Beakman then quotes from the Walt Whitman poem "O Captain! My Captain!" Then says that these type of devises are "Against the Law", Ellie then mentions conspiracies of oil companies to withhold such devises. Beakman says that is not the reason, and then explains the laws of Thermodynamics.

At 4:45 there is a animation showing a Space Shuttle, orbiter, placing a bicycle wheel/gyroscope in space and spinning it. This is perpetual motion, that should go on forever. He says "Zaloom", but then explains that if you try to use that it isn't perpetual anymore, and it won't work, because it will run down. This is illustrated by a extraterrestrial alien powering his UFO with a bicycle alternator. The animation then goes on to explain how the energy is being converted. Showing the fist law as heat being created by a bikes wheel spinning on the frame. The second law is explained by clocks and that the process of it and time only go one way, like trying to break a clock, and trying to reverse it.

Next at 5:35 Ellie then tries to oil the bikes wheel, but Beakman explains that with air resistance and gravity it will slow even faster. Ellie then explains that "The machine won't put out more energy then you put in." Captain then asks about energy in magnets and that it is powering the machines, and Beakman corrects him, saying "Magnets are not the source of energy. Ellie then shows a large horseshoe magnet and lets it go, and it flies across the room and hits Captain in his lower jaw, painted like metal. Beakman then makes a joke about wasted Potential {potential energy}. Beakman then asks Ellie if kids in the 21st century, still don't know about, how magnets work. Ellie then explains that she looked it up once because of a song, but didn't follow any of the links to learn more.

At 6:36 there is another animation scene. This time it shows a sink in outer space, and then zooms in to show the atoms in the sink. Beakman explains how everything is made of atoms. He then talks about the electrons, and their spin. He then explains when enough of them spin in the same direction they become magnetic, like the things on your refrigerator. The animation then shows him pulling off a Beakman drawing from a refrigerator.

This is quickly followed, at 7:00 by a transition, back to the room, and Beakman holding up the drawing and the magnet. Captain then stands up, after having been knocked down by Ellie's giant magnet. He then says how he thinks magnets have energy. Beakman then takes a finger and puts it near Captain's eye and pull on, what looks like a skin mask. Beakman then says "Things are not always as they seem."

At 7:18 Beakman then gives a demonstration with the help of Ray, handing him a magnet. Beakman then describes how the potential energy of the two magnets with opposite poles, increases the magnetic field, but it stops when they come into contact with each other. And the energy that was created by bringing them close together was released as heat. Ellie then asks about how the magnets can push each other. Beakman then explains that you are doing the pushing.

Captain then at 8:00 talks about how motors in cars have magnets also. Beakman then mentions that they are different kind, and he allows Captain to explain that type of magnet. Beakman then says "we already explained that in..." and then Ellie tells the episode of Beakman's World was Season 4, Episode 13 {S4E13 Electromagnets, Beakmania & Senses}. Captain then asks about electric motors, and Ellie then wants to give the explanation.

At 8:25 there is a animation with Ellie giving the explanation. She talks about how the rotor, and the stator of the motors. She then explains how the magnets in the stator turn on and off with electricity, causing the outer permanent magnets to move.

As Ellie finishes her explanation, at 8:50 the animation ends. And Captain is seen reading a book about Physics. Beakman asks her how she learned so much, and she explains that she was "Saving up to buy a Tesla" {Tesla Motors vehicle}. Captain then tells Beakman that it is a type of car.

Captain at 9:05 then goes on to explain how the current of the electricity is the thing that causes the movement. And that if the electricity is not used for at least some of the magnets, the motor will get stuck in a process called "cogging torque". As he is talking a animation projection is shown from his watch.

There is then at 9:34 a second animation showing the magnetic fields interacting, and that the magnets eventually get locked between there different fields. And showing how this is what would happen if the videos of perpetual motion machines was real. He then shows how, and why it would really lock up. Captain then suggests possible ways the videos were faked.

At 10:40 Ellie asks if magnet engines {magnets, with magnets only, no electricity added} could ever work. Beakman explains that as the physics are now today, it is not possible. But that someday "in the future we may make new discoveries that change our core assumptions about how the universe works, forcing us to rewrite physics textbooks". But he adds "I wouldn't hold my breath" {while waiting for it to happen}.

Beakman at 11:16, explains that his job there is done, and when Ellie asks where he is going, he says "I hear Mexico is really nice this time of year." Captain reminds people to "Love with your Heart", and Beakman says "Use your head for everything else." Captain Disillusion was played by Alan Melikdjanian, who also wrote and directed this episode. During the credits Ellie is shown to be played by Crystal Shannon, and Paul Zaloom was Beakman, as if you lucky Beak-Fans didn't already know. 😊 The video ends with a screen showing the shows Pateron address, where people can donate to the show.

Sorry for the delay in sharing Jok's newest comic. This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok, explain how it came to be, that cars replaced horses and wagons, as the form of main transportation. First there is the suggestion that the reader might be worried about global warming, and climate change. Next Henry Ford is mentioned, and how he helped to lower the cost of a vehicle, while employing many workers. There is a explanation that this was change in the way people lived, and now most people live in cities. How coal, and oil eventually became our main source of energy, called "Fossil Fuels", is then explained. Next there it mentions how Al Gore won a Nobel Peace Prize, for his telling everyone about climate change caused by fossil fuels. It is then explained that his film about the subject was based on TED Talk{s} that he had made on the subject. {Jok Church also created a TED Talk called "A Circle of Caring".} There is then a explanation about how Al Gore made a new TED Talk about the subject, and he thinks that "we are now winning this fight to save our planet. It then gives a TinyURL website address to the talk/lecture. It then mentions the graph that is used for the comics background. It shows PV {Photovoltaic} solar energy produced in various years. There are also illustrations of clouds, and the cover of "Time magazine, with a image of Henry Ford on it. Lastly there is also a illustration of Al Gore. There is then a suggestion to research the words "Solar Price Point Parity".

This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman remains silent, and gives the moral support.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok, take time out to discuss Ben {Benjamin} Franklin's famous kite experiment. There is no letter with a question. They mention how in June 1752, Ben actual flew his kite, to better understand electricity. It then mentions the myth of "chopping down a cherry tree", which was attributed to George Washington, but was actually invented by a biography author to give the tale a moral message for children. There is then a fact about a new kind of lightening recently discovered. It then tells about the discovery of lightning sprites, who fist noticed them, when they were actually photographed, how long they last, and the first high resolution photograph. There is also a fast fact about the Columbia space shuttle {orbiter} tragedy. Lastly it explains that Franklin's work {in understanding lightning} is still continuing. There is a illustration of Ben, the key he attached to a kit, the ribbon he held, and behind him two light blobs which are images of lightening sprites.

Sadly, the comic does not seem to be complete as the signature of Beakman, or Jax, is not seen, and there is no topic to "Google" search, as is usually seen in the Jok's comic. There are also three dots near the comics title logo, which follow the angle of the right edge of the logo. These may be the circles seen as a image is placed on top of another image, and for some reason not hidden after it was dropped onto the background, which is white at the bottom to greyish-blue at the top.

Many people sing with their sisters, but these sisters became a band, performed professionally, and even appeared on Beakman's World together, minus one of them. Now just a few months ago their new album was released. A mixture of Jazz, R&B, Gospel, Soul, and pop music. The band Perri is made up of four sisters, with the last name Perry. The years go by, and the music lives on.

This is a series of screenshots from the music video "Sing Unto The Lord" by the band Perri, it is from their new Gospel album called "Back to You". {Three of the sisters were earlier seen singing in Beakman's World, Season 1, Episode 16 {S1E16}, about Thermodynamics. They also appeared on the unreleased soundtrack to a movie called "Life After Donna Dell" that Alanna Ubach wrote, but never got made. Alanna sang several songs with the Perri band/Perry sisters.} The video features three of the Perry sisters, Sharon, Carolyn, Darlene, their sister Lori {Lorraine} doesn't appear in the video, but according to the lyrics she does appear on the album, and is in the audio of this song. {Fast Fact: Lori Perry, Sharon Perry, Carolyn Perry were the three featured singers in the Beakman's World episode.} Their video was released almost a year before the album was released. This video was posted on their official "Perry Lane Music" channel, on July 25, 2015, and is 3 minutes and 59 seconds in length. {Which is about a minute shorter than the album versions of the song.}

The video features three of the sisters singing in the studio and dancing along to the music, while there is also footage of a gymnast/ballerinas performing dance moves/exercises. Then it shows various children dancing in church. At about the half way point the three sisters can be seen outside in a parking lot, singing, and dancing to the music, as the sun goes down. The children are then seen dancing out in a field of flowers. There are religious signs telling about the virtues of faith, and then a pregnant woman is seen with her arms around her belly, and dancing. There are then various cuts between the scenes of them, and the girls, dancing in the studios and other locations. The girls possible are meant to be the three sisters, and as they sing a jet can be seen taking off, as if their words are going skyward. The last thing seen in the video is a "All rights" claim and the companies name shown as "Perrylane Music". Although some of the lyrics to the song are flashed on the screen, there are no subtitles, to the video, but the lyrics can be found on their official company site. {Although Lori does not appear in the video, their website explains that she wrote two of the songs on the album, and was backup singer, but "due to other obligations was not able to complete the project with her siblings."}

There are then facts about what dragonflies eat, this is followed by a TinyURL link to a video showing dragonflies hovering. This week Beakman, Jax, and the late great Jok Church discuss legends and folklore. They begin by telling how stories can be "intriguing", and that when they are retold, the stories change a little. There is then an explanation that the really good stories are retold by communities. Next several examples of these type of legends are listed, including "Dragons, King Arthur, William Tell, Paul Bunyan, and Lady Godiva". Then there is an experiment described, where a person whispers to their friends tells a story, and through 5 or 5 telling, in a circle, the story will usually come out different. It also suggested that each person write down what they heard, and can compare how it changed at the end. The example of "Don't let a dog watch TV", is given. There is then a suggestion to research the words "Urban Myth". The background to the comic is a colored series of faded rings blending into each other with a fog like effect. There is also a stylized illustration of a profile face with mouth open, and raised hand, around the hand is a circle, and on the hand are wave pattern. The illustration is meant to represent the phrase "Whisper in a circle".

This week Jax gives the explanation, while Beakman remains silent, {or at least whispered so softly the text didn't catch it}, and gives the moral support.

This week Beakman, Jax, and Jok explain how different way to discover what you want to be, {for a career}, or do as in objectives in life. First they discuss the biggest part of figuring out the options by asking questions. This is compared to a tangle {of thread most likely, the background image is of various overlapping lines, possibly treads}. Next there is a suggestion to volunteer somewhere, and learn about the world away from home. Next there are a series of "What to Do" {WTD} suggestions. First it says to find something that makes you happy. Then is says decide for yourself, and try not to be forced into something. Next it tells about that people change their jobs and that a choice doesn't have to be forever. It then suggests asking questions about was is important, and trying to find is 'truths'. There is a reminder that "you can't fore it", and that it may take some time. This is followed by a explanation that there are more then just yes and no answers to most things. Next it mentions being able to do more then one thing at a time, Jok is mentioned, and that he is a artist, but could also do other work. The last WTD is that adults often ask the questions themselves, and then the final sentence is upside down, saying she should be herself {her name given}. There is a thumbs up, and thumbs down, image, with a circle crossed out, {possibly meaning that there is more then just yes or no in life.} The last illustration is a series of yellow arrows all come from the same point, and go in different directions, above this is a yellow ? question mark.

This week, Beakman, Jax, and the late, great, Jok Church explain why, when things get wet, there seems to be a cooling effect. They then give two demonstration experiments. The first, using isopropyl {or "rubbing"} alcohol on the back of your hand, and then blowing on it. There is a explanation that the heat of your hand makes the liquid turn to a gas. There is then a quick tip, that if you feel cold when getting out of a pool, you can wipe yourself off, to avoid this chilling effect. The next experimental demonstration involves hot tea, and ice cubes, and explains why the moisture in the air, turns to water droplets on the outside of the glass {condensation}. There is then a suggestion to research the phrase "phase change". There is a illustration of the back of a hand, and a puff of air, and another image of a glass with ice cubes in it, and droplets of water running down its side. This week Beakman, Jax, and the late great Jok, explain what a Tesla is, and who the famous electric car is named after. The question was originally about a "Tesla" dance, but after researching the subject, Beakman/Jok couldn't find any information about such a dance. They explain about the car, and that today, the 10th of July, would have been Nikola Tesla's 160th birthday. There are then facts about his creation of a electrical motor. It then describes "Direct Current", and "Alternating Current" or AC/DC {however not about the rock and roll band}. It then explains about how DC and AC power work, and that DC power can not travel far on wires. There is a explanation about Thomas Edison's DC electric generators, and Tesla's AC version, which Tesla was supposed to get a $50,000 bonus for creating, which he never received. It mentions the "publicity war" between the two over DC and Ac power. Lastly it mentions Tesla {Tesla Motors}, cars as being "the safest, most economical cars on the planet." The background of the comic is white, there are also illustrations of Nikola Tesla, a Model S car by Tesla Motors, and a shield crest of the Tesla Motors logo. There are also graphs showing the wave/alternating properties of AC power, and a segmented/straight path of DC. Lastly there is a suggestion to research the words "Tesla Westinghouse".

This is a series of images of a "Bread and Puppet Theater" production. It features Paul Zaloom as the character of the founder of the puppet theater group, Peter Schumann. He tried to get the children interested in performing with puppets. The performances are usually free, and the performers ask for donations after the shows. In this production, it parodies the type of shows that "Bread and Puppet" actually create. The video is 3 minutes and 9 seconds in length, and was uploaded by a member of the audience Michael Romanyshyn, which posted it to his YouTube Channel, on August 25, 2011.

Bread and Puppet 2011 Kids Act

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=OzzDbcNUp3E>

The video begins, with the camera tipped to one side. There is a introduction by John Bell, as he explains that they are about see a behind the scenes moment at "Bread and Puppet Theater". What usually happens when they create a puppet show. As he is talking camera then turns upright.

Children then run out from behind the curtain which says "Man Carrot Circus". A parody of their annual "Domestic Resurrection {continually relaunched} Circus". Paul then comes out, dressed in a large hat, and beard. Paul says, that he missed his cue to come out with the children, because he fell into the "bread oven, or was it the out house/restroom." He then says they can now begin creating the puppet show, and he has a assistant take the violin, telling them to take it to the pawn shop and sell it. He then describes the puppet materials/costumes he wants the kids to create. Each item is rather old and used, and intended to make the audience feel sorry for the children. The children yell "No". They instead want to go the lake. He then decides to bribe them into helping him create the puppet show. He offers them bread, in the form of a wooden log, that needs to be cut with a saw. He then offers them garlic. When that doesn't work he offers them cookies, he explains how unhealthy they are and the children rush over to get the cookies. They then discover that the cookies are really Paper Mache {Papier-mâché}, and they chase him back behind the curtain.

The camera then turns back sideways, and two members of the audience Christian Dupavillon and Michael Romanyshyn, talk about how they liked the show.

This week Beakman, Jax, and the late great Jok Church explain why diamonds are hard. They discuss how a diamond is constructed, and how the atoms are arranged. It then tells how a model of a diamonds structure can me made, with a "You Can" do it yourself project. The example shown in a photograph is a tower of rolled up newspapers that is 30 feet tall. This is followed by directions on how to use a toothpick newspaper, and tape to create a similar structure. There is then a suggestion to do this project with a friend to make a multilayered tower. There is a illustration of a "Tetrahedron", a suggestion to research the word, a illustration of how to roll the newspaper into the proper shape, and finally a diagram of how to combine the various pieces into a larger structure.

This week Beakman gives the explanation, while Jax gives the moral support.

P.S. Jok Church created a video about this subject, four days before he died. His idea was to create a community learning project at the San Francisco, educational center the "Exploratorium", about how diamonds atoms are arranged, and to demonstrate this through the activities of building these newspaper towers.

Eight months late, and several posts further, we hold these entries to be self evident. That all people are created equally. And that to better understand them, whom created such marvels, we bring about a collection of moments summarizing their lives, and paying tribute to their inventive natures.

It has already been more then one year since "Beakman Fans" was created, almost two years now. And sadly one of the most difficult parts of having a group on Facebook, is that you have to scroll through many entries, and posts to see older entries.

It is hoped that the fans of Beakman, will want to learn more about the people involved in the show, and the projects they worked on before, and people involved in the show, and the projects they worked on before, and after Beakman's World. With hopes that the reader will learn about the people that brought such joy to all of our lives, and share that knowledge with other people. And it will encourage others to create new memories for others to enjoy. Besides the basic entries there are also two exclusive images which we created especially for this e-book.

Today July 19, 2016 is "TibioPernoistico Day". Here is how we are celebrating this special day, devoted to the twin scientist. It is rather simple to make a costume similar to these, with paper, tape, scissors, and a little makeup {or in this case a digital paint brush}. On this special day they were visited by a secret friend. Do you know his name?

Comemorando o Dia TibioPernoistico! {Celebrating the Day of TibioPernoistico!}

This is a image to celebrate TibioPernoistico Day, a day dedicated to the twin scientists from the children's television program "Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum". It is a recreation of the historic event, in our story where Beakman meets the twins Tibio and Peronio. All three characters are played by "Teary Eyes" Anderson. Instead of two rings on either side of the pencil, to act as supports of a pillar. I used a cardboard paper towel tube. {Notice that all three are wearing a green laboratory coat which they all wear on their television shows.} Originally the part of Beakman was played by Paul Zaloom, based on the character created by Jok Church, and the parts of Tibio and Peronio were played by Flavio de Souza {co-creator of Castelo Ra-Tim-Bum} and Henrique Stroeter. {Did you know that in the comic strip Beakman has a twin sister named Jax?}

Here is a link to a video where Tibio and Peronio discuss how the heart works. And a video where Beakman discusses propetual motion with his friends at the "Captain Disillusion" video podcast, with subtitles in Portuguese.

If anyone wishes to contribute a reminiscence of Jok, share a photograph of Jok, or memorial illustration, please contact Richard Bolingbroke.

P.S. We also wanted to remind "Beakman Fans", that Senta Moses' birthday {Phobe in Beakman's World} is next Monday, August 8, 2016. We hope you will do something special such as draw a picture for her, send her a ecard, birthday greeting, or simply watch one of her other television shows, or movies, in which she has appeared.

This is a image dedicated to the passing away of the comic strip "You Can With Beakman and Jax". According to Wikipedia the comic strip began on July 14, 1991, and its final comic was on July 17, 2016, which was 25 years, and 3 days after its beginning. In total about 1300 comics were probably created by its creator Jok Richard Church.

This illustration features the characters Beakman Place, and his twin sisters Jax Place, after they leave the comic strip behind, and they set out into parts unknown. The comics lay spread out on the table, representing part of their past accomplishments. There is a long desert ahead of them, and their future remains in question. Their is a rock pile memorial with Jok's logo. And animated little Jok Jr. Place (he's only about 2 years old you know 😊) following behind his father's creations.

What will happen to Beakman, Jax, and Jok Jr.? That is now up to the choices made by their new foster dad, Richard Bolingbroke. A fellow artist, and friend of Jok Church, and executor of his estate. He hopes to publish the comics in some form, and who knows, maybe someday, be inspired by the comic enough, to continue the comicstrip.

This is a series of screenshots from a television interview of Senta Moses, and her companion actresses, from the touring company of the musical "Annie". At the time she was seven years old, which places this between 1980 - 1981. The video is a digitization of the original broadcast, which was recorded in Des Moines, Iowa. The video was uploaded by former Annie cast member Julie Stevens, however she does not appear in the video. It was posted on her Annie fan site, "Annie Orphans", which tries to preserve the history of the musical, and the actresses that played in the many versions of the show. Julie played as Tessie in the musical show. She also co-directed the film "Life After Tomorrow", along with Gil Cates Jr. Senta Moses would later appear in that documentary, and talk about her time in the Annie musical, in a similar way, to how she describes it here. Although it ends early, the video is 1 minute and 16 seconds in length.

3rd National Tour orphans interviewed in Des Moines

* <http://annieorphans.com/video/3rd-national-tour-orphans>

The video begins with the girls from the cast being introduced. It says that Senta is the youngest cast member {at the time}, she was seven years old. They talk about the show, and how touring with the production has effected their lives. First they talk about some of the fun things they get to do before and after the show. Such as meeting new people, going roller skating, and going out to dinner.

At 0:40 Senta says "And you get to be on TV." They then talk about the disadvantages of being apart of the show, such as traveling, packing, parents getting upset, missing friends and family, sleeping in their own beds with their own pillows. They then talk about the advantages of being in the show, such as "great cloths".

Then at 1:09 Senta says "And, you get to go to neat cities like in San Francisco. We're staying there for four months, my mom promised me a big {doll}." Her last word is cut off as the video ends.

Little Orphan Annie was originally created in 1885 in a poem called "Little Orphant Annie" by James Whitcomb Riley, the character was later turned into a comic strip by Harold Gray, in 1977 the comic strip characters were turned into the musical play named "Annie", which is still being produced, with various actresses playing each role. Senta played the character of Molly for several months, in the musical's "Third National Tour".

This is a series of screenshots from the new Julie Christensen/Stone Cupid music video, for the song "The Cardinal". The song is a slow blues style ballad, and the first song, on the album with the same name. The Stone Cupid album "The Cardinal", was released for digital download through "Pledge Music" store on August 05, 2015. While the album CD was released on January 22, 2016. A vinyl long play {LP} 33 1/3 revolutions per minute, record version is planned for October release. The music video was released on July 31 2016, on her official JulieChristensenVEVO, YouTube Channel. The video is 4 minutes and 39 seconds in length.

Julie Christensen and Stone Cupid - The Cardinal

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IOMiz_G3e80

The song is about a girl that is lamenting her past relationship with a football {rugby} player. From hints in the song, and her book "Stone Cupid: A Book of Words", which features a section called "Park". It seems that the boy was a real person Julie knew when she was in high school and she was a cheerleader, and he played for the "Newton Cardinals", in Newton, Iowa.

She reminisces about her relationship with him, when seeing a Cardinal in a tree, and remembering the bird was also on the guys helmet.

This video takes a slightly different approach to the events in the song. Julie plays a singer on stage in a theater, and there is a mischievous man in the shadows watching her. There is also a series of flashback scenes with a girl in red, being chased by this man. He is dressed in a similar way to a silent movie villain.

The video opens in a gothic type setting, with the girl walking through a graveyard, and him following her at a distance. Later she walks through a forest, and he eventually walks up and passes behind her. This could represent his pursuing a relationship with her, and the relationship ending. Then him dieing, as the graveyard that she visits.

During the video, the main guitarist of her "Stone Cupid" band, Sergio Webb can be seen playing guitar. Julie's scenes, and Sergio's, are filmed separately, and they are in a darkened room/theater. In which only one man in the shadows can be seen, possibly, as if she is performing for his ghost. The theater scenes are overlapped with the scenes of the girl, and her pursuer. In the graveyard scenes various stone angel/cupids can be seen. Referencing the band's name, and the song she wrote, about how she wished a Stone Cupid would come to life, and find her a lover.

A third element of the video is a series of stock footage/film clips, of a old football {rugby} game.

Julie is wearing a black dress in the theater, the same color of the cloths that the man is wearing. While the girl is wearing a red hooded dress, similar to that of the character "Little Red Riding Hood". Despite the lyrics, "The cardinal he's a red, red, bird", he is not seen in red, suggesting that she is remembering him, through a time, when she only thinks about him after his death.

The video ends with the girl in the darkened theater, pulling back the hood of her dress, to reveal her face.

This is a series of screenshots from a "Do It yourself", or "YouCan", UCan 😊, video by Senta Moses Mikan. It was posted to her official YouTube channel on May 23, 1026. It was planned to be the first in a series of videos she made about home improvement challenges. It is 1 minute, and 12 seconds in length.

Over My Head: Episode 1

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZIM95buyUxA>

The video begins with olden style mono recorded big band music. And the title of the series, written out in chalk style, "Over My Head".

She begins the video by making a 'counseling group' type introduction admission, about her bad habit, saying "Hello, I'm Senta, and HGTV ruined my life." She then tells how she would watch the shows on that channel over and over, and that she soon began thinking that she could do some of those things. "I'm under the delusion that I can do home improvement, and that's just not true. So this channel is about me being over my head. Like, way over my head, like I'm under water."

Next at 0:22 she introduces her assistant Leo, her pet dog. The dog seeing her with the camera, moves from a sitting stance, to a laying down, it then sticks out its tongue, and turns away from the camera. (Sort of like what a child would do if you try to film them.

😊 Senta says "Well, he doesn't think I'm qualified either." {Qualified to conduct home improvements.}

At 0:27 Senta then explains that she wants to show the viewer some of the successful projects she completed in her own home. First she shows a ceiling fan, "Its got three speeds, and all of them work." Next she shows a lighting dimmer switch, saying, "I installed this dimmer switch, and I didn't blow up the house."

She then goes outside at 0:39 showing a tree she planted, saying "This is Charlie, I planted him a few months ago." She then says "If" it grows she will change its name to "Chuck". {Possible a reference to the comic strip character "Charlie Brown" sometimes called "Chuck".}

Senta then at 0:45 shows a door sill that she replaced, but possibly used the wrong type of glue. There is then footage of her holding the glue tube, with her explaining that it is crafting glue. She then asks the viewer not to tell anyone. She then explains that these few successes are not good because she gets overconfident, saying "That is not a good thing for the rest of my house." {Because it makes her want to do more projects.}

At 0:57, she explains that she wants to replace a small fence along her walk path, because "its all rotted out, fallen apart, and just kind of ugly." She ends the video by saying "We'll see how that goes."

There is then a return of the big band music at 1:08, and a chalk board message "Stay tuned to see me build a fence! Hopefully..." is seen, as the video ends.

I also once wrote to Mattel toys suggesting that they make Barbie versions of Beakman's World toys, but they do not accept suggestions and my letter was returned unopened. Hopefully this is something you could accomplish.

DUCKTALES Theme Song Singer Jeff Pescetto on withjosh.com

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dBarDmPwT5g>

The video begins with Josh introducing Jeff, as a "singer, songwriter, producer", and that he also sang the song DuckTales.

Then at 0:20 Josh asks about how Jeff got started in music, and about his home town of Baltimore Maryland. Jeff explains that he started music at the age of 9, and he played Beatles songs, and got to see them when they appeared on The Ed Sullivan {Show in February 9 1964}.

At 0:55 Jeff talks about how he wrote his first song when he was nine years old, called "My Little Girl". He then sings a bit of the song. He says it was similar to other popular songs at the time such as "My Baby does the Hanky Panky".

Next at 1:40 Jeff talks about how he paid to record his songs, and that his father sent Jeff's song to a contest, and the song won a $10,000 prize. He then talks about entering the contest the next year and winning again, for best vocals. He then talks about how a lady named Jaymes Foster, got Jeff a introduction to Quincy Jones {Quincy Delightt Jones, Jr.}. He then mentions sending Quincy 14 of his songs. And explains that he produced them himself. He then got a publishing deal to work for Quincy, and Jeff's Attorney suggested that he not take the work, because it would restrict his work. But Jeff wanted to accept the job, because he would get to work with famous people like Quincy, Johnny Mathis, Engelbert Humperdinck, Gladys Knight, Kenny Loggins, Al Jarreau, George Benson. "It was very surreal. I felt so lucky. But then again, I felt like, 'I must be good'." He then mentions that it was also because of Quincy, that he was getting to work with these people. Jeff then talks about record labels he worked with, such as MCA, Sony, and BMG and "It was not the same."

Josh at 6:06 asks Jeff about recording the theme song for DuckTales. Jeff explains that he sang a lot of demo songs for people when he first started, and Mark {Mark Mueller}, asked him to do the demo, and that the song was later approved for the show. But a band called "The Jets" was going to do the song, but the people at Disney wanted to use his version of the song for the show instead, and he was asked to rerecord it. He says that it was recorded in one day. Jeff then tells how his family was proud of him, and when people knew he sang the song, they would ask him to sing it again for them.

Josh then asks Jeff to sing some of the song for this video, and Jeff agrees. Jeff then talks about how he enjoys the song, but seems like that is the only thing that most people know that he had worked on.

Jeff at 9:00 begins singing the first few verses of the "DuckTales Theme" song. Then at 9:28 Josh asks how people can contact Jeff. Jeff then gives his email address, and says he would enjoy making music with people if they want him to write, produce, or sing a song. Josh then thanks him for being on his WithJosh.com show. Josh then makes a joke about how DuckTales is now available on DVD, {possibly hoping that he would not get into trouble from Disney that the song was sang on his video, if he helped advertised the television show which the song came from}. The video then fades to black, then there is a copyright notice for the video.

Jok Church "departed" more then 4 months ago. And now as we, his family, friends, and admirers, are left to remember him. We are also given the chance to find out more about the man, and understand his need to create, explore, and learn, about the world he lived in. He tried to encourage others to help make changes for the better, and get people thinking about how the future could be made better, by the things we do today. Jok accomplished many great things in his life, and we should remember to think of his courage, and deeds, when we think about, the joy he left behind, in his work, and in his friendships.

Jok will be dearly missed but his television show will continue to find new audiences, and with the help of Richard Bolingbroke, hopefully the comicstrip will be published in book for all generations to enjoy the art, humor, colors, and general combination of learning that Jok brought to each comicstrip. Jok is gone but now the "Legacy" begins, it is up to the fans to see that jok and his creations are not forgotten. Paul Zaloom Hey Tyler, do you have any idea what stations the show is on in Mexico? Any info you may have would be helpful...yeah, 25 years. We should do something!

Tyler Anderson Hi Paul, maybe you, Alanna Ubach, Eliza Jane Schneider, and Senta Moses Mikan, could put on a Beakman's World reunion show/Interview event/Beakman fan convention. At some local theater near the studio in which the show was original filmed. Some fans, and actors from the show "You Can't Do That on Television" {YCDTOTV}, rented out the studio, their show was originaly filmed at, and had a 'meet and greet' interview, and tour show/convention for fans. They charged the fans to attend the event, and to take a tour of the studio, and then sold video of the event as a DVD "SlimeCon", later "SlimeCon 2004", and a documentary film "You Can't Do That On Film", about the show, with interviews from the cast. The televisoin show they were on, has never been on DVD, and all they were not allowed to use any footage from the show, so they had to home movies. During the event they also got to sell their other DVD's and other products that the former cast had created after the show ended to the fans. Jay Dubin, Mark Waxman, Teresa Parente, Betsy Potter, and Marijane Miller might also make great guests, as well as the voices of Don and Herb, the puppets are probably in a prop house somewhere.

I asked a friend from Mexico, Carlos if he knew which stations in Mexico had the Beakman's World. Hopefully he will answer soon.

September 21, 2016 at 4:33am

Tyler Anderson Carlos said "Once Niños, and the channel C7 Jalisco", are the two stations that broadcast the show in Mexico.

If there is not time for a reunion, or as a teaser for that reunion, maybe each of you; you, Alanna, Eliza, and Senta could film a segment, in a parody of "The Wizard of Oz", with each person getting ready to go see a fictional "Scientific World of Beakman" sort of "The Wizarding World of Harry Potter" parody. You could be the Great Beak-Oz, preparing the show, setting up experiments, and having them topple over, and commenting on how it was much easier with assistants to help get these things going, for the show. Maybe even Mark Ritt's daughter would dress as Lester's Daughter, have her say she his helping out her dad and is on way to the event, where she meets Alanna, Eliza, and Senta along the way, and they bring a piece of scientific equipment that Beakman needs. I saw a drawing Gabriella made with herself in a rat costume, maybe she could get the chance to be in those videos as Lester's Daughter.

Back before Beakman's World was produced, probably at about the time that Jok Church was still producing radio. Jay Dubin was a film student, and appeared in this short film. It is a rare view of Jay in front of the camera, near the beginning of his career.

This is a series of screenshots from a student film that Beakman's World director, Jay Dubin created while still at Pratt Institute, in the Brooklyn section of New York City. It was the Prologue/Introductory video to the school's 1973 "Student Film Festival". Jay Dubin, along with several of his fellow students appear in the film. It is a parody of the opening scenes of the film "2001: A Space Odyssey", 'Dawn of Man', about evolution. The video was filmed at Montauk Studios, and was uploaded to YouTube by one of its associate directors, Tom Kostro, and put on his YouTube channel, on May 07, 2014. It was 5 minutes and 11 seconds in length. {There also seems to be a black and white version of this film, it has a few blank seconds before and after the film.}

"dawn of film" - Pratt Student Film Festival- 1973

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QrBgvWOjd8Y>

The video begins at dawn on a beach, and seagulls are heard. As the sun rises, a mound of Earth is seen, it has the shape of a person on their side. On that land people asleep can be seen. They slowly wake up, as music begins to play, and a video projector, and two film reels can be seen with the sunlight behind them. {The film projector parodies the monolith, of the "2001: A Space Odyssey" film.}

Jay Dubin awakes at 2:40, wearing a leather jacket, white and black striped shirt. He has a beard, and moustache. Everyone then walks towards the projector, and shyly try to touch and through things at it. As they touch it, the music of drums and fanfare from 2001 are heard. One of the reels of film then gets thrown into the air, and it is seen spinning similar to the Bone/Spacecraft of the 2001 film. The video then switches to a different reel/car's wheel rim being lowered into frame, and the words "1973 Student Film Festival", appear in yellow text. The reel/rim, passes through the screen, then lowers again from above, before the screen fades to black.

Did you know that the comic strip, and the planned television show, Jok originally created, were not originally for a character called "Beakman"? I know most people are hoping for a new video link, and review. But, since it is still September, and the shows 24th Anniversary month, I thought I would share one of the hidden secret of "You Can With Beakman and Jax", and "Beakman's World". Originally the idea was for two of the "Star Wars" characters, to present the scientific information. Read onward to learn who they were. 😊

This is a screen capture of the Jok Church AMU {Andrews McMeel Universal} Speakers Bureau, profile. It was created by Jok's comic strip publisher, and featured facts about Jok, and his comic strip, so that people could decide if they wanted to pay Jok to come and give a lecture/talk to a group. Sadly since his death and the ending of his comic, the page has since been deleted. But thanks to the Internet Archive's Wayback Machine, readers can discover these lost treasures. It featured several great facts about Jok, and the origin of the Beakman character.

* <https://web.archive.org/web/20081205181735/http://www.amuniversal.com/ups/speakers/church/>

The profile begins by talking about how many letters, with questions, that Jok receives. It then explains that "Jok answers those questions from children in newspapers, in books and software, at science museums, and on the Internet and TV."

The second paragraph talked about his parents, and how his dad helped him build things, while his mother helped him get scientific equipment while he was still young.

It then talks about his schooling, and how he became a radio station newscaster, and helped to start a new radio station.

This is followed by the news that the station went broke {bankrupt}, and then mentions how he got to work for George Lucas answering the fan mail. It then talks about his writing and editing in the "Star Wars Fan Club Magazine", {actually titled "Bantha Tracks: The Official Star Wars Fan Club Newsletter"}. His job was to explain the movie technology, and other aspects of Lucasfilm productions in a simple, "comprehensive, entertaining and humorous way."

Next it mentions that Jok was given the job of creating new projects for the Star Wars characters. The project he came up with was going to be called "Here's How". It was to be a comic strip and television series, in a format that would tell how things work, it was going to feature the characters C-3PO and R2-D2. "C-3PO teaching foreign language, and R2-D2 explaining the more physical world." {However this project was later canceled, probably because the character R2-D2 does not actually speak.}

Next it explains that after the idea was "shelved", Jok began working on the comic strip "You Can with Beakman", {Jok created Jax about a year later}. It then mentions Jok created the television show "Beakman's World", and how he also helped create a museum exhibit based on the show.

It then talks about his being a author, his work on the National Geographic CD-ROM's, and his consultant works with Apple Computer, and the "Leap Frog" educational toy company.

Lastly it gives the email, phone number, and address of the AMU, which would arrange for Jok to appear at a event.

The video was recorded by Alcanzando el Conocimiento Una Herramienta Vital, {Reaching for Knowledge... A Tool that is Vital}. It was filmed at the "Instituto Politécnico Nacional" {National Polytechnic Institute}, during the Feria Internacional del Libro 2016 {International Book Fair 2016}, which was held on August 25, 2016 the video was uploaded to their official YouTube channel, the next day, on August 26. Conferencia de Paul Zaloom (Beakman) en el Instituto Politécnico Nacional
{Conference with Paul Zaloom (Beakman) at the National Polytechnic Institute}

* <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Zk74hXsQV04>

The video begins with the "Alcanzando el Conocimiento Una Herramienta Vital" logo. Then it shows Paul walking onto the stage of the press conference. He seems to say "You know I'm in this?" He then gets to the stage, and picks up his microphone, and jokingly says "No pictures", but the microphone is not turned on. He then picks it up again, and it sadly still isn't turned on. So he seems to mime the words. He is then introduced by a speaker at the podium. A translator sitting near Paul, then explains what was said about him. Paul then tries to talk into the microphone, and finds that it is still not working. He is then handed a working microphone, and begins his greeting to the audience.

At 01:52 Paul begins his message to the audience by talking in a high pitched voice saying "It is a great honor and pleasure..." He then pretends to give back the microphone, as if it is also not working. He is then brought a microphone stand to use, instead of having to hold the microphone. He then hands it to his translator, and asks him to "Put it in my bag, will you?", as if it is a gift. He mentions how much he enjoys being there, saying "I love Mexico. This is a magnificent, beautiful, wonderful country, filled with the warmest, most terrific, hard working people." He then goes on to explain a fact that its people work 2,371 hours in a year. And that is "more than any other people in the world." His words are then translated into Spanish and spoken by the translator.

Next at 03:27 Paul explains that is a fact despite the thoughts of people like "The Trump" {or in its original spelling "Drumpf"}, a current presidential candidate. He then concludes by saying "It's really wonderful to be here, and thank you for inviting me."

Paul then at 04:07 asks if the audience has any questions, he then looks around, pretends that he does not see anyone ready to ask a question, then pretends to leave by saying "No questions. Bye."

The first question is then translated for Paul at 04:55, it asks Paul about how he feels returning to the Institute, the place responsible for Beakman's World/El Mundo de Beakman coming to Mexico. Paul then asks if they own "Canal Once", a television station in Mexico, he is told that they do own it. Paul then explains that he did not know that the institute owned the channel, and says "Thank you for putting the show on television."

Paul then at 05:30 says he will not answer their question, but instead he will answer something they did not ask. He says how, it is interesting that the show is popular in Mexico.

The translator at 05:57, then asks for Paul's reaction to people wanting the show, and Paul to make appearances in Mexico. Paul says the show was liked in the USA, but in Mexico "people here, have passion for the show." He then says it is the same in Brazil, and that he asks people in each place, "why are people so passionate about Beakman's World?" He then explains that he gets many answers to that question, such as because of the shows humor, and the way it taught things. But Paul feels that it was because of the closeness of the characters, and the eye to eye contact of the characters with the camera, and audience. He says that people seem to think "I was their friend, and I think that has a lot to do with that emotional connection." He then goes on to say that it is also possibly because of "the Latin {American} temperament..." "that just responded to the sense of humor, and the approachability, and the directness" of the show.

At 09:26, Paul then asks if anyone else has an opinion concerning the popularity of Beakman in Latin America. After receiving the first question in Spanish, the translator then begins speaking in Spanish also. Paul then reminds him that the translator needs to speak in English to him. The comment from the audience was that the person felt the popularity of Beakman's World was because other science things were boring, and the show made a 'new step ahead' in education.

Next at 12:02 the translator tells how one audience member grew up watching the show, and that it was never boring, and was still current in its topics and science.

A third person's opinion, at 13:33 is translated. The comment is from a worker at the Institute, and he explains that the show is popular because of how complex things were explained simply, and that the experiments could be done at home. He then compares this to nano-science, and having to teach things in a simplified format, and have a passion for science.

At 14:50 Paul is asked if he plans to teach science as Beakman to children with new technologies. Paul explains that he does Beakman Live science demonstrations. But because of ownership rights to the character, he can not create a YouTube channel for the character. He says he is allowed to do performances in front of a audience and that "I like making that contact with audiences, ahh, in person. That's important to me". Paul is then told this Conference is being broadcast on the channel that originally showed the program in Mexico. And Paul is asked to give a message to the people watching.

Paul at 16:47 says "Hello, Once. Thank you for watching, thank you for laughing, if you laughed, and thank you for loving science. Ahh, I feel very grateful to Canal Once for bringing Beakman to, ahh, to Mexico. So Gracious, and hello, and goodbye."

A woman then asks two questions translated at 17:57, first asking if science should be taught differently around the world, because the Beakman's World format seemed to work well in Latin America. The second is that if Paul wants fans to imitate the Beakman show, with their own videos about science. Paul answers the second question first, say "it is great if people are inspired to make new science shows." He then says they should have humor, simple explanations, and be very visual. He then answers the first part of the question explaining that the show's staff always felt like they were partners with parents, teachers, librarians, and children in the teaching of science. He then tells how "We {the staff of Beakman's World} get to do the fun part", ahh, but we're... We open the door to science and say 'Come on in, it's not so bad'. He then explains that 52% of the audience in the USA was adults. He then tells how adults could possibly understand the science, if it was meant for children. "Because we all think that science is so difficult, so adults would say 'Oh, if Beakman explains it, I'll understand it...' Plus we had a lot of jokes for adults."

At 21:22, the translator again speaks Spanish to Paul, and Paul jokes saying "I'm learning Spanish." He says that the woman commented that children are similar Beakman because both are, "Curious, Funny, Irreverent, and also a little bit disgusting." She then said, that she liked Lester. The question part of her comment, is about why he does theater {adult puppet shows}, and these science shows. Paul explains that is how he got started {in the entertainment business}, as a puppeteer, and he still does that. He then mentions that he will be doing his puppet show in Mexico, in November 2016, at a Festival.

Paul at 23:38 apologizes for not speaking Spanish, and explains that he learned French language in school, and he thinks all people in North America should learn Spanish. He then says how he will be performing in the French language for a show in Montreal {Canada}.

The translator, then at 24:38 translates a question about how much science Paul learned from performing as Beakman. Paul says he learned to "take complicated things, and make them simple, and make them funny." He then talks about communicating with a camera, and making a connection with the audience, and how to "put my passion, and my curiosity, into the subject matter". He then gives acknowledgment to the writers for all the work they did making the complex subjects simple, such as the subject "Relativity".

Next at 26:40 Paul is asked about why so much effort is put into teaching science to children. Paul answers saying "Because it is interesting to know how the world works, around us. I mean, you know, it gets down to the basic question of 'why have a education'". Most people answer 'to have a good job,' but Paul says, "Really, I think the purpose of an education is for people to learn how to think, how to create, how to put all the pieces together, and to make connections between things that seem like they are not connected."

The next three questions, at 27:55 come from a women that asks, if Paul was interested in science before appearing as Beakman, what is the subjects of his movies, and lastly what is his thoughts of children that are growing up with the new technologies such as internet. Paul begins by answering the last question first. Saying that it is great that information and can be found quickly, and that people can learn things quicker, but that some things might cause people to have a short attention span. He then talks about his two movies, {In Smog and Thunder", which he describes as a fictional war between two California towns, San Francisco and Los Angles and that one of them becomes part of Mexico at the end. And the other movie {Dante's Inferno} a political satire, with paper puppets. Both films were based on the paintings of Sandow Birk. Lastly Paul talks about how he was always interested in the interrelationships between animals and planets, in Natural Science.

At 31:38 a women asks if there was any analysis/indicators of the show's influence of its audience. Paul says 'no', the studio was not interested in knowing the effect of the show. They only wanted it to become successful. Paul then tells how the USA Congress passed a law saying television channels had to have educational television. He then explains that the Columbia Pictures and Sony spent a lot of money on the show, which would not be possible today, because it would be too expensive.

A man at 34:12 then says that he enjoyed the show and that Paul "did my homework", then later clarifies it saying made my homework easier. Paul asks the translator to translate, the {because it seems to have a double meaning, having Beakman do the person's homework, and Beakman helping with the homework.} The guy then says "We love you Paul". Paul then says "I'm just the face, the pretty face, but that there are many, many people behind Beakman's World. Many talented and dedicated people." He then talks about Beakman's creator Jok Church, {but says Jok died in May, when it was really in April}.

Paul says Jok was "very dedicated to teaching children about science, and he was a wonderful man. And I wouldn't be here today, you wouldn't be here today, if it wasn't for Jok Church."

A woman at 36:02 then says how she enjoyed the show, and that she wanted to know if Beakman was based on a actual person, and if Paul had a favorite scientist. Paul talks about that he helped to develop the show, and at first they didn't know what the character would be like. Then during concept and idea conversations Paul would get exited and start talking in a funny way and moving his hands, and the executive producer {Mark Waxman} said "that's the guy, that's Beakman." Paul then admits, "it's me, being a little crazy. So that's how the character got invented. It's also very New York." He then compares that to Trump, {or "Drumpf"}, saying that "Trump is a horrible person, an as* {or asp} hole, and all that. But what is very funny as a New Yorker, he talks very New York." "It's very funny to hear that kind of stupidity from, you know, my neighbourhood."

At 39:19 Paul talks about a actor known as "Soupy Sales" {Milton Supman, from the show "Lunch With Soupy"}, which Paul calls it "a model for the show {Beakman's World}," saying "it was a kid's show, and every adult in the country watched it. And it was his craziness, and his intensity, and some of the ideas of his show that we used." Paul then talks about how theater and early television shows, much like theater had a edge of the scene, and characters would come in and disappear. He then talks about the character Ray the camera man, which was just a arm, that came in from the side of the screen, was a Soupy Sales idea, {but in that case it was usually a dog paw coming in and out of the screen}. Paul says, "it gives kids imagination, like 'who is that on the other end of that arm'. You know it's interesting." He then describes a scene from a Soupy Sales episode, with the furry arm coming into a scene. Paul then lists various guests on the 'Soupy' show such as Frank Sinatra, Sammy Davis Jr., and the Rat Pack. He then goes on to explain "we kids didn't understand it {the show}, but we knew it was cool."

There is then a question at 42:47, asking if there was a line between the personalities of Beakman, and the performer Paul Zaloom. Paul says it is difficult to draw a line to separate the two. He then mentions how in some Beakman, promotional videos he overused the accent, and that seemed to not be the character. He then explains that "the most important thing, is to make people laugh. 'Cause, it's not successful unless they laugh. When you laugh you become open to ideas." Then saying "I've dedicated my life to humor. So, that's the most important thing to me. Then everything else comes, comes second."

Someone then at 44:54 asks how long they can continue, and Paul says, "I can stay all day".

Next at 45:19 Paul is asked about the selfie picture he took of himself and the crowd at UNAM {Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, = National Autonomous University of Mexico}, that the 75th Anniversary of the Physics department, there. Then he realizes that there might be some rivalry between that school and this school, so he jokingly says "UNAM very bad". He then talks about how the staff at UNAM, realized that they would have to make his show bigger and bigger to accommodate the bigger and bigger audiences that wanted to see Paul/Beakman. He then talks about how the mayor of Mexico City went to the show, and he was invited to the American Embassy, and asked to talk about STEM {Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics}. He then says he was 'shocked'/amazed at the amount of people that would come to see him at the press conference there at UNAM. Next he talks about coming home to the USA and explaining how popular Beakman was, and his friends were skeptical. Paul then talks about the National Public Radio {NPR} radio program that wrote a story/news report, with interviews, about the experience. He then explains they still do not understand what it is like in Mexico for Beakman. He then talks about the "warmth {kind hearts} of the people of Mexico". He then says, "that's really why I love Mexico, it's the people. {audience clapping} Gracious".

Beginning at 49:48, other speakers then give information about the press conference, and thank Paul for being there.

After the speaker finishes, at 51:03 Paul asks people to come to his Beakman Live show for the following day, and then he mentions that he will post information about his puppet shows on his "El Mundo de Beakman" Facebook page. He then says he hopes that everyone can come to it. After the translator finishes, Paul then says "Gracious", claps his hands, and tips his hat, to show respect to the audience. The video then fades to black, and the "Alcanzando el Conocimiento Una Herramienta Vital" logo is seen again.

This is a series of screenshots, from a earlier Webinar {website seminar}/class that Eliza Jane Schneider produced. It is a sample of her teaching accents, dialects, and vocal training classes. Here is just a sample of one of her classes. The video was uploaded to the Eliza's "Accents and Dialects: Master Class" Facebook page. A page Eliza hosts, where she, and other people share links to voice over, and actor training information. This video was 39 seconds in length, and was uploaded on October 14, 2016.

The video begins with a text message saying "Learn to do Any Accent Authentically".

At 0:05 Eliza uses the phrase "He beat his dog, because it bite him", as a example of the Russian pronunciation of words. There is a chart showing the different ways the words are spelled out, and illustration of the mouth and where the tong is located at various moments in the pronunciation of those words.

Then at 0:09 Eliza talks about growing up in New York, and mentions that she had "Manhattan Envy".

Next at 0:13 Eliza starts her French accent, saying "All right, so let us think about the sounds we are to listen for in the French accent." Then "My aunt and Uncle are both here today, and they are very high maintenance {needy, or people that are picky about what they approve, or disapprove of}."

During the video, there is also a banner advertisement for this free workshop class, as well as a tagline which says, "Train with 'South Park' star and celebrity accent coach, Eliza Jane Schneider". Then another text message, which encourages the viewer to register for the class, and to "Find Your Voice Today!" The video then fades to black.

Although the link isn't in the video itself, here is the link which Eliza shares with the video.

Continuing on from last week, we go straight from one class, to another. It's almost Halloween, and one of the creatures most associated with Halloween are bats, because many people are afraid of them, and they come out at night. You might think it is a bit batty, but some people spend their lives studying bats, as a batologist. {Not to be confused with the study of people dressed in Batman suits, which is a process that also seems to affect people at Halloween.} If you ever wanted more information about bats, our favorite batologist, gave a lecture on the subject 4 years ago, and thankfully it was recorded for everyone to enjoy, and free to download on Vimeo. She also still continues teaching classes about bats, even though she is retired, her latest 3-day class was taught from April 22-24 2016, for the Anza-Borrego Foundation {ABF}.

This is a series of screenshots, and one compilation image of moments, from a lecture by Dr. Patricia Brown-Berry. Most "Beakman Fans", might remember her from Beakman's World, Season 2, Episode 05, {S2E05}. She talks about the dangers that bats have been subjected to, over the last few years. The lecture was part of a series of, Sierra Nevada Aquatic Research {SNARL} lectures, and was uploaded to Vimeo by Carol Blanchette, a staff member of the "Valentine Eastern Sierra Reserve", a part of the University of California, as part of their "University of California Natural Reserve System" project. The video is 56 minutes and 14 seconds in length, and was available for download, at a size of 238 MB, it was uploaded on June 07, 2012, just two days after the lecture which was held on June 05, 2012.

Lecture: Bats in Peril by Dr. Patricia Brown {Patricia E. Brown}

* <https://vimeo.com/43629014>

The video begins with Patricia in the middle of a sentence, she is talking about how the troubles/perils of bats is "coming to a head {important turning point for a event}, and we could loose a lot of our native bats." Behind her is a projection of a dead bat {or maybe it's just sleeping, on the ground}, with the title of her lecture, the date of the lecture, and the name of the company she owns "Brown-Berry Biological Consulting". {She and her husband owned the company, until her died a few years ago.}

At 00:13, she gives a overview of the subjects that she will talk about, with a subject title of "Threats to Bats".

In her first topic "Why Protect Bats?" at 01:20 she talks about the benefits of bats, such as eating harmful insects, pollinating plants, and the medical uses for the saliva of Vampire Bats (see, you knew there would be a Halloween thought in here somewhere 😊). She then talks about how often bats reproduce, and that about half of them don't live to become adults, and how long they can live, up to 34 years.

Next at 02:53 Patricia talks about "White-Nose Syndrome" {WNS} and it's effects on the bat populations. The screen behind her says that she bases this part of her lecture on research by Pat Ormsbee, and Toni Piaggio. She then talks about the "Little Brown Bat" {Myotis Lucifugus} of North America, and how they are most at risk of getting the disease. She talks about how it affects them, and the cause of the disease, a fungus {Pseudogymnoascus Destructans}. She then talks about bats hibernation, and how the fungus wakes them, and they use up their stored fat too quickly. She also shows some microscope images of the disease. She then talks about the disease, and that it grows best when it is cold. She then talks this fungus was found on bats in Europe, and how there the bats don't seem to die from the fungus. Then in winter 2005-2006 in New York, it was found to be killing bats, and the cave that it first appeared in was a tourist cave. And the fungus probably arrived on the feet of a tourist, that had been in Europe. She then shows the progression of the disease through the USA and Canada. During this part of the lecture she also uses a laser pointer to demonstrate how the bats flew from one series of caves to the next, spreading the fungus. She then talks about the endangered Gray Bat (Myotis Grisescens), and that the disease has gotten into areas where they live. She then talks about "Bat Maternity Caves", and how the young from various species of bat might get infected.

At 13:10 Patricia talks about, and shows pictures of Howe Cave {Howe Caverns}, and how the bats there were infected with the fungus. She then shows a image listing how many bats in various caves where left after the disease. The "Colony Declines" in these caves were from 87%-100%. She then talks about how the Little Brown Bat, and the Indiana Bat (Myotis Sodalis), of North America are the bats most affected by the fungus. She then shows images of other bats that are also affected by the disease. She then overlays a map of the locations of the bats, and how the areas in which they live overlap. She then gives a summery of the topics that she has covered so far, as well as explaining that the disease can travel from one bat to another bat. Lastly show shows a map with the Eastern and Western USA and that very few locations are in the East, while most are in the West, she then explains that bats probably don't spread the disease as much as people do, because they can have it on their shoes, and that is probably how the disease got from Europe to North America. Patricia explains that little is known about the hibernation cycles of bats in the West of the USA. She then talks about the Townsend's Big-Eared Bat (Corynorhinus Townsendii), and how it seems to be immune to the disease.

Next at 20:42 Patricia talks about the importance of closing caves, and abandoned mines to human visitors, and cavers, so that new bats won't get infected by the disease. And if people have to go between caves, to clean their cloths, and soles of their shoes, with industrial cleaner, to prevent contamination. She then talks about the "Western Bat Working Group", and their guide lines to help prevent contamination.

Patricia, then at 24:40 begins talking about other dangers to bats, such as wind turbines. Mostly effecting Red Bats (Lasiurus Borealis), and Hoary Bat (Lasiurus Cinereus). She explains that in one season the "Wind Farms" of West Verginia were responsible for 33,000 bat deaths. She then talks about how the Red Bats migrate, and that in the time of Audubon {John James Audubon} the skies would be filled with migrating bats. She then talks about the bats effects of the Riparian Systems {interaction between rivers, plant life, and animals}. Patricia then talks about how many bats there were when she started working with them about 40 years ago, and some of the causes for the decline in the bat populations such as, urbanization, destruction of their habitats. She then explains that bats migrate North-South, and not East to West, and some bats don't live in caves. She then mentions that besides the wind blades impacting the bats by hitting them, the turbines can also cause Barotrauma, because of the air pressure near the blades. She then explains how large, and fast some of the turbines spin, and that a bat can not get out of the way in time, if it flies into a area where a wind turbine is located, and it is about to be hit by the blade. Patricia then talks about solar panels as being a safe alternative, explaining that, "I believe in solar, I have solar panels on my roof. I think it is a great source, and I think we need dispersed solar, or we need solar parking lots, and roof tops in malls." Then she says she doesn't want to see places "tear up new desert" to do build new solar energy areas. She then shows a image where most of the solar energy in the USA is generated.

At 29:37 Patricia shows a image of her husband {named Robert D. Berry, listed as "R.D. Berry" in the papers they wrote together}, and explains that bats can even roost in cracks in rocks, and holes in the ground. She then explains that solar farm builders can destroy the homes of these type of bats. There is then a brief pause as she tries to setup her next image presentation.

Patricia's second subject image presentation starts at 31:03, it is called "Mine Closure and Bats: Hazard Abatement and Renewed Mining". She explains "this is a topic I've been involved with since 1968." She then shows a image of a bat in a man-made tunnel, along with that, it shows the title of this section of her lecture, and her email address. She then talks about how some of her favorite animals live in caves, and that she has retired, but that she is busier then ever. She was involved in doing "Mine Surveys for government agencies, and mining companies." She then talks about the good, and bad effects on bats if a mine is closed. She talks about protecting people, and animals from falling in, and not disturbing the bats. Next she talks about when bats can't get into the caves to hibernate, and that unqualified people are making the decisions as to how a cave, or mine, is closed. Which could do more harm then good. She then tells the story of a competitor of hers, trying to do the same job. He would throw a rock into a mine, and if no bats came out, he would assume there were no bats in the cave. She then shows various mines, and caves, then explain how they were closed, or not closed, and how it can be done safely, and also with thought towards bats entering, and leaving. She next talks about dangers inside mines such as unexploded dynamite. She then talks about how there is vandalism, and people killing the bats, and other cave creatures for fun/sport, and leaving the bodies of the animal laying on the floor of the caves. She recounts a moment where she came across a animal that had recently been killed, and she worries what would have happened if she had been there only a few minutes earlier. She then show various other animals in mines, such as tortoises, snakes, owls, mice, and "Say's Phoebe" (Sayornis Sayi), and mentions that there are about 50 other creatures. Next she talks about how she has been banding, and studying California Leaf-Nosed Bat (Macrotus Californicus) since 1968. She talks about how they like warm places to rest, but they do not hibernate. She then gives a listing of the results of her surveys, and that she has looked into about 10,000 mine features, and that the bats usually use the caves for roosting, and maternity areas. She then talks about how mines help to gather a lot of bats into one area, and that the bats can keep warm, and grow faster in a larger community, where food is more plentiful. Patricia then talks about the disadvantages of having so many bats in one place, and then the problems that can result, when bats are locked in, or locked out, by the mine being sealed.

Next Patricia, at 44:28 talks about a survey of mines she did in the Battle Mountains area in Nevada, for the BLM {Bureau of Land Management}. She then explains that various mines have different uses for the bats. She then talks about another survey she did, looking for habitats of the California Leaf-Nosed Bats, which took her, and her colleagues 5 years to finish. That survey was for the USGS {United States Geological Survey}. She then encourages anyone that is interested in learning more about bats natural history, to come to her classes, at the California State University Desert Studies Center, which she teaches each October. She then gives a overview of things she feels are important to mine, and cave closure decisions. The information is shown on a info graphic titled "Management Issues". She then shows places that have had surveys done, and places that it is too difficult to do surveys at. She then lists various equipment that she uses to do her work. There is then a list of ways a mine can be closed, with examples of bat compatible gates, and entrances that bats can not get into, without difficulty. She also jokes about how bars in a bat compatible closure are 5 and 3/4 of a inch apart, "because that is what people try to jam their kids through, and they can't. You know, that seems to be the stopping point of their skulls... So, uumm... I {think}... Maybe a infant with a more flexible skull could go through". These usually have a removable bar, that can be removed to allow access to the caves for a bat biologists. She then compares these to "closures that are "Not Bat Friendly", such as metal culverts, and narrow vertical shafts. She mentions how bats are not helicopters, and need enogh space to fly in and out of mines. She then says that she requested that metal culverts stop being used, and she had to prove that the bats wouldn't use them, and as a result the BLM stopped using them in the desert areas. She then shows a image of a foam closure, and there is a picture of her husband jumping up and down near one of them. She then jokes about how he did not die by falling into a mine. She then explains that she worries about these foam plugs, because they could deteriorate quickly, and they are usually covered with dirt, and could be problem in the near future. She then shows some places which had bats, and then the mines were reopened, and the bats homes where destroyed. She then talks about having to help evict bats, from some mines, but prefers to find ways to close the mines so bats can still get in.

The last image she shows is a sunset against clouds, with the rays of the sun rising with the clouds, creating a bat like figure, this she calls her "Bat sunset". The projector then turns off, and the lights come on, and the video ends.

Happy Halloween!!! What would this holiday be without monsters? This week we explore the depths of a Bread and Puppet Theater performance, with Paul Zaloom as the ring master, for the Zombie Olympics. Prepare yourself for the terror, where politicians seek the mindless voters, and the zombies occasionally breakout into dancing routines.

It was recorded by long time documentary producer Dee Dee Halleck, as part of her "Hand Held Visions" series, {which is also the title of her book "Hand Held Visions: The Impossible Possibilities of Community Media " ISBN: 0823221008}. She uploaded the video to her dhalleck {Hand Held Visions}, YouTube Channel on August 28, 2008, it is 3 minutes, and 14 seconds in length.

Zombie Olympics

* https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=b_2S6JdxY24

The video begins with Paul Zaloom as the ring master, of a fictional "Sour Dough Philosophy Circus". He says "Ladies and Gentlemen, we present to you, the "Zombie Olympics". There is then a red in video title with that name.

At 0:12 various actors dressed as zombies, walk out behind the stage screen, {a old school bus, with a banner over it, which names the fictional circus}. On the banner is a zombie cook holding a spoon, above it are illustrations of a scorpion-man, and a elephant with a India style umbrella on its back. They walk with extended arms, and grown as they walk, {the stereotypical zombie walk}.

Then at 0:30 Paul returns and explains that this is the "U.S. Zombie Olympic Team", and they are about to try the "Economic Recovery Plan, Pole Vault". This even has a zombie with a pole on his shoulder, but because of his hands being outstretched he falls to the ground and the pole lands on top of him. The zombies cheer "U.S.A." even though he failed.

Next at 1:04 Paul returns, to explain that the next event is called the "Voting Event". Then two people that want to be elected officials, try to get the zombies to gather around them. The first person says they want "Off shore drilling" {for oil}. The second person says the same thing, but adds the words "In the Ocean", and the zombies change sides and go towards the new person. Person 1, then says how they want "Change", and Person 2 says that "I've got change" {money}. But as she tries to shake their hands, they begin attacking her, but luckily Paul returns and saves her.

Paul at 2:00 explains that zombie tell will do their closing event dance, called "The Spread of Democracy". The band then performs a stylized version of the Michael Jackson song "Thriller", and the zombies, dance like the characters, in Michael's video. They then get agitated with each other and destroy one another, and fall to the ground.

At 2:52 Paul returns and explains that was the "Zombie Olympics" show. The music then continues, as the zombies stand up, and walk back behind the bus. There is then information about when the video was recorded, and by whom.

This video was uploaded to one of the two known YouTube channels that Dee Dee Halleck uses. Most of her videos, are specialized on the topics of politics, and other social events. This is a series of screenshots from a short comedy film, called "A Reuben By Any Other Name". About a sandwich, and the various ways it can be created. In the story Alanna Ubach, is one of the people enjoying the sandwich at a local restaurant with a friend. When the subject of how the sandwich is made, begins to be discussed.

Everyone disagrees about how it should be made. The short video/film is 4 minutes and 16 seconds in length. It was uploaded to YouTube by Noble Savage {Productions} on September 12, 2010, and on Vimeo by the director Jeremy Lanni on September 28, 2010.

The film begins by showing the outside of a real restaurant in Santa Monica, California called the "N.Y. Bagel & Deli". As a sandwich is being made there is a list of actors in alphabetical order. Alanna Ubach and Matt Winston are seen seated together. Next Anita Barone, and Paul Ben-Victor are seen seated together. Then a young girl named Jasmine Anthony is seen seated alone. The title of the film is then seen, {which is a play on the words "A Rose By Any Other Name" a famous line from William Shakespeare, in a way comparing that to sandwich making}. Pamela Cedar and Larry Cedar, are then seen as a waitress and a customer. He asks her about how the sandwich is made, and sees that the sign near the menu says it is "The Original", and that the store is called "N.Y." {New York}, but he points out that is not how it is made in New York. She then complains that she feels that the customer is suggesting that the New York version is more Jewish then the L.A. {Los Angeles} version of the sandwich. Then Paul Ben-Victor and Anita Barone talk about the proper way to make the sandwich. The young girl, Jasmine Anthony then asks why they "insist on a narrow and unchanging interpretation" of the sandwich? Alanna Ubach, then asks if everyone can't just make their own version. She and Matt Winston then discuss it with the earlier couple. They then try to find a communality between the different versions of the sandwich. Then they begin to argue about where the sandwich was first made. Alanna then point out that it sounds like the other couple is saying that they are better then her and her friend. They then go into their own separate talks about what makes the sandwich special. The girl then raises her hand as if in class, and the customer asks everyone to be quite so the girl can ask her question. She then asks that if they all share those two things meat and dairy, then how can they be thought of as Jewish, because that would not be a Kosher Food. Everybody is surprised by here realization, sandwich special. The girl then raises her hand as if in class, and the customer asks everyone to be quite so the girl can ask her question. She then asks that if they all share those two things meat and dairy, then how can they be thought of as Jewish, because that would not be a Kosher Food. Everybody is surprised by here realization, and they stop eating their sandwiches. The customer then changes his mind and asks for a Matzah Ball soup instead. The film then ends. And the credits role, and the characters names for each actor are shown. {We have not used the character names here, because it would make things slightly more difficult to explain, and the names aren't mentioned in the film, other then in the credits.}

This short film can also be found on the Noble Savage Productions official website. It links to their YouTube version of the film, and has a few behind the scenes photographs of the film. The Vimeo version seems to be slightly better in video quality, and has a shorter URL address to remember.
